'LIE'-STATEMENT BY NORTHCLIFFE

British Publisher Hot Under Collar at His Government's Act

STIRS HORNET'S NEST

Old World Political Sensation Caused by Fight Between Two British Factions

WASHINGTON, July 29.—"It's a lie."

This was the short and explosive comment of Lord Northcliffe today when the London International News Service dispatch from London stating that the British foreign office had issued a statement denying that Lord Northcliffe had anything to do with the preparation of the invitation to Lloyd George to be the guest at the British embassy here.

Minutes before word came from the morning mail and presentation streaming across the desk of the publisher flapping from side to side as the reporter was admitted. The publisher beckoned the reporter to a waiting room and resumed his dictating.

"Well, young man," he smiled, "I want to get out of this heat. I'm tired and it."

The London dispatch containing the denial of the British foreign office of Lord Curzon's connection with the cancellation of the embassy offer was proffered to him. He read it, he said, "I can't see."

The dispatch was read.

"It's a lie," Northcliffe said, stopping in the act of leaving the room, and then, as if recalling something further about it. The publisher was asked, "What more do you want?"

Northcliffe returned. "I said it was a lie, didn't I?"

The telephone rang and one of his secretaries called him.

"I happen to know he did it,"—referring evidently to Lord Curzon. Lord Northcliffe turned to the telephone and the interview was ended.

Northcliffe and his American representatives and H. Wickham Steed, editor of the London Times, were entertained at luncheon today by the foreign writers, an organization of American newspapermen who have served in foreign countries. Mrs. Edward McLean, wife of the publisher of the Washington Post, will entertain Lord Northcliffe at a dinner tonight at her residence.

LONDON, July 29.—King George took a hand in the Northcliffe-Lloyd George controversy and denied Lord Northcliffe's statement in New York that he (the king) had said to the premier:

"You must stop killing my subjects."

King George's statement repudiating the accuracy of Lord Northcliffe's interview was contained in an authorized statement Lloyd George read in the house of commons.

The statement read by Premier Lloyd George follows:

"Statements have appeared in certain organs of the Irish and English press attributing words of great concern to the king relating to Irish policy.

"They appeared in an interview which Lord Northcliffe seems to have given out in the United States and which was sent to newspapers here.

"It is quite impossible to deal with calumnious statements but they are of very categorical character and they attribute a very serious statement to the sovereign calculated at the present moment to prejudice the chance of an Irish settlement. The statements have been circulated very freely, especially in Ireland.

"The king therefore authorized me to issue the following:

"'His majesty has had his attention directed to certain statements reported in an interview with Lord Northcliffe appearing in the Daily Mail and reproduced in the Daily Express and some Irish newspapers. The statements are a complete fabrication. No such conversation took place nor were such remarks made by his majesty.'"

Following the reading of the statement, Premier Lloyd George said:

"I hope this statement may do something to sterilize the effect of the criminal malignity. To serve personal ends he (Lord Northcliffe) is endeavoring to stir mischief between the allies, misunderstandings between Great Britain and the United States and frustrate the hope of peace in Ireland."

The premier's remarks were received with applause.

General Christian Smuts, premier of South Africa, who has taken a leading part in the Irish peace negotiations, denies references made to King George and himself in the interview given by Northcliffe in New York.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Old world politics lashed the world disarmament conference off the boards today as Washington discussed Lord Northcliffe's latest blast against the Lloyd George administration.

In a formal statement, issued from a hotel room here, Lord Northcliffe announced that his invitation to be entertained at the British embassy while in Washington has been withdrawn.

"Knowing the methods of India of Lord Curzon the British foreign secretary, Lord Northcliffe is pretty certain Lord Curzon has adopted these methods here," the statement said. "On the present occasion Lord Northcliffe sees Lord Curzon is not dealing with Indian natives or the owners of small Indian newspapers."

Although the British embassy withheld comment today, it is understood Ambassador Geddes had issued the invitation to Lord Northcliffe personally, some months ago, and that it had been in no sense an invitation for Lord Northcliffe to be the guest of the British government or the personal guest of the ambassador.

As part of differences between Lloyd George, Lord Curzon and Lord Northcliffe, it is understood the ambassador felt it to be improper to use the British embassy for entertaining his personal friend, but the news of enemy of the administration he represents.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Lord Northcliffe this afternoon cabled to Lloyd George in London a repudiation of an interview published in the United States and Europe in which he was quoted as having stated that the king demanded of Lloyd George that he "stop killing the people of Ireland."

Lord Northcliffe read the International News Service dispatch relative to an attack made on him by Lloyd George in commons and of King George having made the statement attributed to him and then dispatched the following cable to the secretary of the king.

"Please convey to his majesty, with my humble duty, my denial of ever having ascribed to his majesty any such words as stated by the prime minister. I gave no such interview."

LONDON, July 29.—A rumpus, which is marked by steadily increasing bitterness and which now has assumed international ramifications today has grown out of the hostilities between Lloyd George and Marquis Curzon, the foreign secretary, on one hand, and Lord Northcliffe, the great newspaper proprietor, on the other.

The latest development, and one which promises to increase the hostility, was the cancellation of Lord Northcliffe's dinner at the British embassy in Washington.

The importance of this incident was shown by the fact that the foreign office today took official cognizance of it and issued a formal statement saying that Marquis Curzon had nothing to do with the action of Sir Auckland Geddes, the British ambassador, in Washington. Before this denial was issued friends of Lord Northcliffe had charged the foreign secretary with responsibility for the cancellation. They declared Marquis Curzon was getting his revenge for the attack against him in Northcliffe's London Times, when the foreign secretary was characterized as a "pompous and inefficient" and an unsuitable delegate to represent Great Britain in the far eastern conference.

Premier Lloyd George was attacked in the same article and Northcliffe has already felt the influence of the premier's displeasure through the closing of special channels of information which the Lothian Times formerly enjoyed.

If it is to be a war of reprisal the next move is up to Northcliffe, who is now in Washington.

Honors Come Fast to Barnes When He Finally Wins Title

President Harding presenting trophy to Jim Barnes.

Honors came fast to Jim Barnes after he had waited 10 years for them. Barnes, one of the country's greatest professional golfers, won the national open championship recently over the Columbia Country club links at Washington after trying for 10 years to cap the title. Then, to make the occasion more memorable, President Harding, himself no mean golfer, personally presented the championship trophy to the modest Barnes.

TONKAWAS KNOWN AS FOREIGNERS

Tribe Long Ostracized and Reputed as Cannibals

By C. M. BARCHET.

PONCA CITY, July 29.—With the re-establishment of the Indian agency at Whiteagle under George A. Hoyo as agent, three of the tribes brought within this jurisdiction—the Poncas, Otoes and Missouris—have been neighbors, allies and friends for centuries, whereas the Tonkawas, the other tribe now associated with them, were really "foreigners" in a far country until approximately recent years. The Ceanes, Omahas, Pawnees and Iowas were likewise friends and allies of the Otoes, Poncas and Missouris for many years, whereas the Tonkawas evidently played a lone hand the majority of the time and were forever at war. They are only a handful today, however, compared with the Poncas and Otoes-Missouris, for the last two went together as one tribe in 123, speaking the same language.

Even Coronado encountered the Tonkawas on the staked plains of Texas in 1541 when he started on his memorable trip to find the city of Quivira, where he understood there would be gold and other valuables galore, and they told him that Quivira was much farther to the north. The Tonkawas were called the Querechos by Coronado, who also found the Teyas or Wichitas in that same locality. In the years that followed Spanish possession there were many battles fought between them and the Tonkawas, who were also enemies of the Comanches, Apaches and other far southwestern tribes. In fact the original home of the Tonkawas was in the valleys of the Colorado and Guadaloupe rivers in southern Texas.

The Tonkawas, during the 18th century were attached to the Spanish missions in Texas, but the incoming whites and the other tribes found them to be troublesome neighbors, and they were finally driven out of southern Texas. They were held by the other tribes to be cannibals, one of the very few Indian tribes of America to be so designated, and this charge brought them into frequent wars. In 1862 they were living along the Brazos river, but during that year moved northward to the Washita valley, near the present site of Anadarko, where they remained after the Caddo, Wichita, Delaware, Shawnee and other Indians fled northward into Kansas at the outbreak of the Civil War. On the night of October 25, 1862, the Tonkawas were attacked by a force of Delaware, Shawnee, Caddo and other Indians and nearly half their number wiped out in the battle that ensued. It has been charged frequently that this attack was made because the Tonkawas were cannibals.

Joined the Confederacy.

The Tonkawas, along with representative parts of the Comanche, Wichita, Waco, Caddo, Anadarko, Tawakoni, Keechi and Iowa tribes, entered into a treaty of alliance and friendship with the Confederate States on August 12, 1861, in a meeting at the Wichita agency near Anadarko, and following the attack upon them in October, 1862, the Tonkawas took refuge under the protection of the Confederates in Texas, where they remained until after the war. It has been claimed by various writers that the Tonkawas did, however, become scouts and spies with the Union army during the latter part of the war, and after the war's close the Tonkawas did take service as scouts with the regular army, principally out of Fort Griffin, on the Brazos river.

Fight Pardon to Finish.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 29.—Promising a fight to a finish if Eugene V. Debs and other war prisoners are pardoned at this time, John G. Emery, national commander of the American Legion, today urged President Harding that such action would be interpreted as a license to disregard law and order.

CROWDS AT AKDAR DANCE

With All Outdoors as Ballroom, Tulsa Defies Midsummer Heat.

With all outdoors for a ballroom and the breezes that tried in a feeble way to be compensation for a 99 degree day instead of electric fans, some of the dancing contingent of Tulsa spent several hours last night dancing in the street in front of The World office to music played by the Shrine band. Boulder from Fourth to Third was roped off for the dance that began at 8:30 with a drill by the Shrine patrol.

The crowd began to gather with the clearing of the street shortly before 8 o'clock. By the time the Shrine patrol occurred and wearing fezes, appeared every inch of available space was taken by spectators. Following the drill dancers took possession of the street. Music by the Shrine band was enjoyed by hundreds of people other than the dancers.

POLICE RAID DRUG STORES

Proprietors Fined Limet At Trial In Municipal Court

Frank Tillman was found guilty and fined $10 and cost in municipal court Thursday afternoon on a charge of possession of intoxicating liquors. Tillman was arrested when officers Nodavitz, Frank Bird and D. B. Mendler raided the Lee Helm drug store, 216 West First street and seized several bottles of "jake."

Henry Cogle arrested a few minutes later when the same officers raided his drug store at 314 West First street was also fined $10 and costs for possession of "jake" by Judge F. D. Prentice.

Big Business by Finance Board.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Summarizing the export financing handled since its resumption of activity last winter the war finance corporation showed in a statement tonight a total volume of business of $63,471,789.

If a married man could only draw the salary his wife thinks he earns!

BARBER SHOP IN PRISON

Encouragement to Fastidiousness Strengthens Prison Morale

CLEVELAND, July 28.—Prisoners who desire to dress up and retain a facidious appearance can do so by taking advantage of the opportunity offered them at the Cuyahoga county jail here. A barber shop is maintained without expense to the patrons and every prisoner is encouraged to make use of it.

At the request of Sheriff Charles E. Sizemore, the county recently purchased three barber chairs and a quantity of barber supplies. The barbers are prisoners awaiting trial, selected because of proficiency and they receive as prison honorarities and they leave the jail.

Several guards stand by while the prisoner with the barber chair special ministrations being taken with those charged with the more serious crimes.

HARBOR FOR NAVAL SCHOOL

Basin Provided to Protect Training Ships and Seaplanes.

U. S. NAVAL TRAINING STATION, GREAT LAKES, Ill., July 29.—Thousands of midwesterners and western boys who trained for naval service here during the war without ever seeing a naval vessel may come back next year and find training ships and seaplanes chained alongside at anchor under the high bluffs of Lake Michigan.

Work began this month on a $1,000,000 harbor which congress recently authorized for the training station. When completed, late next summer, the basin will provide room for six or seven ships drawing twenty feet to ride at anchor.

A breakwater of riprap and concrete is being built to enclose an area approximately a half mile long and a quarter mile wide, with an entrance to the southeast. The enclosed harbor, besides affording an anchorage on this unprotected shore for training ships and chasers, will be used as a takeoff basin for seaplanes of the aviation mechanics school and for small boat drill. Owing to the lack of protection from the open lake the seaplanes are now unable to fly in rough weather.

$2,000 FOR PRESCRIPTION

Benjamin Hyde Overwhelmed With Advice on Sleeplessness Cure.

CHICAGO, July 29.—The manner in which man will attempt to assist his fellow creatures, for financial return or otherwise, is shown in the number of replies received as the result of an article published a year ago which erroneously stated that Benjamin Hyde, a retired contractor, would give $1,000 to anyone who could tell him how to obtain sleep without the use of medicines.

The article subjected Mr. Hyde, who is suffering from paralysis and lame, and more than 2,000 letters were written giving him varied lines of advice as to how to sleep.

Mr. Hyde has recently made another offer of $2,000 but in order to avoid abuses he has announced that persons who have contributed in some of the reward to persons of good standing. This condition is given because persons who are well known can receive immediate consideration and enable him to get to sleep without having pains in his head.
