PRICES REDUCED BY MILK PLANTS

Better Milk at Less Cost Is the Slogan of the Local Dairymen

Tulsans are to get better milk at less cost, it is announced, as a result of the "milk for health" campaign which has been in progress since Monday.

The milk campaign wasn't designed to readjust prices or improve the quality of the city's milk supply. There are things, it is explained, that Department of agriculture milk campaigners prefer to leave to local authorities. The sole object of the campaign has been to spread educational information as to the value of milk as food. The only reference to prices, when arrangements were being made to put on the campaign here, was to obtain from dealers a written agreement that prices would not be advanced as a result of the possible increase in demand.

Dealers seem not to have been content, however, with complying with the agreement not to increase prices.

12-Cent Reduction.

Pasteurizing plants announce a reduction of 12 cents on the gallon in the price to retailers. That reduction, from 52 cents to 40 cents, means a wholesale price of 10 cents a quart. While all grocers and distributers haven't reduced their prices to consumers as yet, many of them already have given their customers the benefit of the cut and it is expected that others will follow.

Several of the raw milk dealers also have made reductions in the price of their milk. Others say additional reductions are to be made as soon as spring pasture reduces the cost of production.

At the same time, too, the conditions under which milk is being produced and distributed are showing a marked improvement, according to Early Cass, city milk inspector. Many of the raw milk dealers, Cass says, are equipping their dairies with hard-surfaced dairy barns and installing boilers and sterilizers. Several of the pasteurizing plants are spending a great deal of money, the milk inspector says, equipping their plants so they'll be able to put out milk with a minimum amount of overhead and at the same time under the highest sanitary conditions possible.

Give Tulsans Benefit.

It is a concerted effort on the part of the dairymen, it is said, to permit Tulsans to get the full benefit from the increased demand resulting from the "milk-for-health" campaign.

Simultaneous with the increase of interest in milk, as a result of the campaign, more careful attention also is being given to milk inspections. Under the terms of a Tulsa ordinance, milk producers are required to file with the milk inspector tuberculin tests of every cow from which milk is sold to the city. Unusual care is being taken now in this branch of milk inspections.

With the exception of one speaking date, to sophomores in Central high school, which is fixed for Friday morning, the school's phase of the milk campaign was concluded Thursday afternoon. Three Tulsa organizations of adults, however, are yet to be reached by speakers. The Tulsa Chamber of Commerce, the Retail Credit association and the Delphian society are to be visited by speakers Friday. The rest of the week will be devoted to conferences looking toward follow-up work, it is announced.
