CARPATHIANS A HELP TO COUNTRY

FROM ALMOST INSURMOUNTABLE BARRIER TO ENEMIES OF HUNGARIANS

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 29.—The National Geographic society today tells something of the Carpathian Mountains and how nature in the European situation now upon Central European affairs could help them.

"The Carpathians are nature's best friends which Hungary has. They stretch in a wide sweep around the northern edge of the Danube, from Pressburg on the Danube, near Vienna, to Orsova on the Danube, across from Roumania. Thus they bend nearly the entire boundary of Hungary east and west of the Danube, a line of about 800 miles in length. The office of this are, as well as the most formidable approach, are unique. Hungary. Troops pressing forward along the whole northern perimeter would be facing the best defensible position, and operating with the most shelter from the rising sun.

"Besides serving as the people who have lived in the Danube as plain long and faithfully as a first-line defense against the attack of their neighbors in the south and east, the Carpathians have been as partisans for the southern plain in times of peace. They hold back the struggling rivers, which would rush across the plain and inundate the Danube, and turn it to the east. While the Carpathians [illegible] their average height and be one of peaks, the walls nevertheless are lofty enough to extort the Danube towards and eastwards, and to be filed there away from Hungary. Again, in summer, the cool northern breezes are caught and modified on the Hungarian plain, and then pressed down upon Austria-Galicia.

"The Carpathians are the southernmost of the great northern mountain systems of Europe, and, like one of its parts of most historic interest. They are wide and rugged in their northern extremity, while toward the south they fall away in lesser mountain groups and longer sloping plateaus. With the exception of parts of the eastern Carpathians, which belong to Roumania, the range has mainly within Austro-Hungarian territory. Its total area is 72,000 square miles.

"The Carpathians, which the greatest height in the Hohe Tatra group, near the center of the range and just east and south of Cracow, the chief city of Austrian Galicia. The system as a whole is [illegible] with lake. Throughout the chain the passes near the mountains vary from 1 to 3,28 miles. The heights of the peaks in the Hohe Tatra group are 8,000 feet and more. Gerlachovka, or peak, the highest one in the entire system, reaches 8,737 feet above the sea level. Thus the Carpathian range has no mountain formidable to compare with the more majestic Alpine group or with those of our own Rockies. There are numerous gaps through the Hungarian line of defense, ranging from 2,000 to 1,000 feet in height, and these, with together with the numerous characters of some of the passes, have made the Carpathians a very effective barrier against western invaders.

"These mountains, which Hungary, beginning on the east from the Austrian provinces of Moravia, Silesia, Galicia, Bukovina, Dalmatia and the Kingdom of Roumania. Some of the most splendid peasant people in the world live along the Carpathians. Their [illegible] is [illegible] and [illegible] in the system. However, many of the higher peaks are given over to masses of bald rock and rock crystal.

Slingsby Verdict Not Due

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 30.—"Lady" Slingsby, 4 years old the million dollar San Francisco "silk stocking" baby, will know within a few days whether he is the heir to the vast estate and broad British acres of his grandfather, and his father legitimate son and heir in the eyes of the British court, or only the disinherited substitute that the other Slingsby heirs claim he is.

The famous case has been before the King's Probate Court in London for several weeks. Lieut. Charles Henry Reynard Slingsby and his wife are contending for their child the Slingsby fortune. The fight for the fortune began in California. The parents of the child have bared their life at the hearings. The lieutenant told of how his family had hounded him with detectives for months before the birth of the child, and Mrs. Slingsby broke down in court. Truly.—That the London hearing has been favorable to the American heir is the information contained in letters reaching here.
