SAD DAY FOR A CLEVER GOLFIAC

Attorney W. W. Thayer Loses Purse and Bicycle in One Day.

W. W. Thayer, attorney-at-law and golfiac, met with a double misfortune yesterday. Mr. Thayer and a party of friends, among them Attorney H. A. Bigelow, went out to the links at Moanalua in the afternoon. Things progressed nicely for Thayer.

While Bigelow was teeing he found a good teeing ground and made the whole round of holes. Late in the afternoon the party started home. They boarded a 'bus, and having ridden out on bicycles, the wheels were disposed of by the driver, who stacked them up on top of his vehicle. There was little room, however, for the last wheel, which belonged to Thayer, and he was obliged to hold it beside himself, half outside of the 'bus.

Presently a bold, bad confidence man, in the guise of a perspiring native, came along and offered to ride the wheel into town for Thayer, who gladly accepted the offer. When nearly into town the attorney reached into his pocket in search of some small change with which to reward the man on the wheel and was much dismayed to find his pocketbook gone.

Thayer immediately jumped out, hailed a passing hack and went in search of his purse, which contained ten dollars. At the links he could find no trace of his property, and could not arouse any interest in the unconcerned Hawaiians who lounged about. He frantically went over the scene of his late triumph, covering the whole round of holes and cleek and putter, but to no avail. The pocketbook, with Thayer's Christmas fund contained therein, had evidently taken refuge in a bunker, and some lucky caddie probably "copped the dough."

Thinking of the presents he would not buy, and feeling pretty blue, generally, Thayer returned to town, to find that his pilikia had just begun. The confidence man had decamped with his bicycle and hasn't been seen since.

The unfortunate attorney is trying hard to imbue himself with the proper spirit of "Peace on earth, good will to men." His one consolation is that he won that game of golf, anyway.

PEARL IN HIS COCKTAIL.

In the Midland Hotel dining room the other night John Breckwoldt, who represents a New York kid glove house, ordered an oyster cocktail as a starter for his dinner. The last oyster he discussed had a hard substance mixed up with it.

"I felt something touch my teeth," says Mr. Breckwoldt. "I though it was a piece of oyster shell, but on examining further I found it was round. I had an unpleasant suspicion—could it be the cook had dropped his collar button among the oysters? But no, upon removing a sort of skin that surrounded the substance here is what I found." And he showed a glistening white globule about the size of a very large pea.

Mr. Breckwoldt at once decided he had found a pearl. He was naturally elated. And when a jeweler had examined it and pronounced it worth from $200 to $250, Mr. Breckwoldt fairly beamed.—Kansas City Times.
