FIRE EXTINGUISHERS.

A TALK WITH A WELL-KNOWN FIRE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL.

Criminal Indifference and Economy Are the Causes of Many Fatal Conflagrations — A Suggestion About Chemically Fireproof Christmas Tree Materials.

New York, Jan. 26.—"Why is it, captain, that there has been such a shocking loss of life by fire in New York recently? Are modern appliances totally inadequate, or is it due to negligence and lack of presence of mind on the part of the sufferers?"

"Well, you might say that all three causes are more or less involved," replied the chief, contracting his eyebrows thoughtfully. "No power on earth, for instance, could have helped that family of five that were burned to death before any possible help could arrive. Where burning oil is scattered all over the place, it gets in its fatal work in just no time at all. This horrible accident came, you know, from turning over a piano lamp, one of the most dangerous pieces of furniture ever allowed in a drawing room. Insurance companies really ought to rank the piano lamp along with the gasoline stove. As for the woman in Amsterdam avenue, she showed unusual presence of mind, and if there had been any one within calling distance her life would probably have been saved. She was found in her bedroom, wrapped in blanket and comforter, and had evidently extinguished the first flames, but had not succeeded in totally excluding the air, and they caught elsewhere. She was cooking her Christmas turkey, and caught fire from the stove. By the way, you may not know that Christmas week, with the week before and after, are always most destructive to the country, the fires being many, and unusually severe. Year after year the loss of life and property from Santa Claus, holiday-decked windows and Christmas trees has become greater, until now there is an effort on foot among insurance companies to insist that there shall be on hand the means for instantly arresting a fire that springs from such causes, and, furthermore, that Christmas trees themselves, the cotton batting and other inflammable materials employed for decoration in churches, houses or show windows, be rendered chemically fireproof."

"But you haven't told me yet what to do in case one's clothing does catch fire. Are there no modern appliances that are a sure protection?"

PROFESSIONAL ADVICE.

"Nothing is better than these chemical fire extinguishers, the 'hand grenade,' 'emergency,' etc. They come in pint and quart and larger bottles of both glass and tin and cost from $1 to $2 a bottle. A sufficient quantity of this liquid poured over a person or scattered about a burning room will invariably extinguish a fire in the beginning. Or if 20 pounds of salt and 10 pounds of nitrate of ammonia be dissolved in several gallons of water and bottled, it will serve as a first-class extinguisher. By splashing and spraying burning articles an incombustible coating is immediately formed and the fire utterly quenched. The wet blanket is a very pretty theory, but the article itself is never at hand when most needed. It takes buckets of water to wet a blanket, and there isn't the time and often there isn't the water. If one could only remember, where there is not a rug, a bit of carpet or blanket within reaching distance, just to lie down and roll over on the floor, that would always extinguish a fire in its incipient state. But people lose their heads in a fire more quickly than under any other circumstances; their first instinct is to run, and that of course feeds the flames. You have no idea how rapidly human flesh burns. When I was a fireman I was once standing outside the station house and saw a fire break out just opposite. A lamp standing on a mantel shelf just above a stove—one of those inexplicably careless arrangements that people go on indulging in year after year—fell and broke on the stove, of course scattering the burning oil. As I say, I saw the fire break out and dashed across the street. A woman wrapped in flames was already in the hall—precisely the worst but most usual thing to do—crying 'Mein kind, mein kind!' I wrapped my fireman's coat about her, threw her down (which you must always do) and rolled her over on the floor. The flames were soon extinguished, but it was too late, the woman died that night. I tell you this to show you how rapidly the deadly work goes on, and how instantaneously one must act."

CRIMINAL CARELESSNESS.

"How is it that these criminal extinguishers are not in every house?"

"Simply the carelessness of people and their unwillingness to spend the necessary money. Why we have the utmost difficulty in having them placed in hotels, lodging houses, etc., where it is required by law. Landlords evade the law whenever they can, often grudging the bit of rope that is made obligatory in rooms where one or more windows do not open upon a fire escape. This manila rope, an inch in diameter, of sufficient length to reach the ground and with its fastenings of sufficient strength to sustain a weight of 1,000 pounds, is a pretty sure thing, you see, and is not expensive. Yet it requires our utmost vigilance to have it provided, even where the law requires it."

"Are people in general timid about taking to a rope, and do they manage it successfully in making a descent of several stories?"

"O yes; they take to the rope gratefully enough when driven by scorching flames. There is a best way to descend a rope just as there is a best way for everything else. It is almost fatal to attempt to slide down as the agony and injury to hands is unendurable. One should make his descent calmly, hand over hand, with a little thrust of the foot against the building now and then to keep him clear from possible burning of the casing beneath."

"Can you suggest nothing further in the way of home protection?"

"Beyond the chemical extinguishers, the Wilson fire escapes and ropes? No. But these are adequate if only they were in every residence, public and private. If you ever find yourself in a burning room, cut off from all escape, wrap something woolen about you, particularly protecting the head. Keep the mouth and nose as well shielded as possible, for hot air and smoke are as destructive to life as fire itself, almost instantaneously destroying the air cells of the lungs. Crouch down on the floor, as smoke rises, and crawl your way to the window and scream for help.

MORE FALSE ECONOMY.

"Why is it that more people haven't a private call like the messenger call, communicating directly with the fire department, instead of being obliged to run round the block, hunt for a key, etc., which often occasions the delay that is fatal?"

"That again is purely a matter of expense. Any private residence may have such a box, and many have. The Vanderbilts, for instance. We have been called up by it, too, which resulted in fining Mr. Vanderbilt $5. Whenever the department is called out on account of a burning chimney the person is fined $5, which goes into our pension fund. This regulation is to make people more careful in the care of their chimneys. Every year we renew our efforts to make this law binding upon the landlords instead of the tenants. But the landlords had some pull and got in ahead of us, and the law now reads against the tenants. It should, however, be the landlord's duty to keep his chimneys in proper condition. Sometimes a tenant's whole household goods would not sell for $5. Of course in those cases we use our discretion.

"Our latest and strongest contest is against skyscrapers. Chief Bonner emphatically states that buildings exceeding 125 feet in height are beyond the reach of the fire department's best efforts. He suggests, if the skyscrapers are to continue to soar higher and higher, a law should be passed compelling the owners to provide standpipes, pumps and hose, machinery to work the pumps and competent men to run the machinery and handle the hose."

He said the dock is all right, and the measurements are satisfactory.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

TABLE IS FAST BEING CLEARED OF BUSINESS.

Payment Stopped on Warrants—The County Commissioners Held an Important Meeting Yesterday.

The county commissioners held an important meeting yesterday.

On motion of Hammond a resolution was adopted creating a fund to be known as the solary fund and the treasurer directed to deposit therein all fees and emoluments from county offices. Four hundred dollars taken from the general fund, $176 from the road fund and $39.65 from the building fund was transferred to the general fund, while $100 was transferred from the general to the contingent fund.

The bill of J. C. Wangsgaard for $19.50 witness fees, was disallowed on recommendation of the county attorney of last term.

After discussing the financial status of the county for a time the following resolution, introduced by Seaman, was passed:

"Whereas, This board has reason to believe that the late board of county commissioners of this county, which retired from office on Jan. 4, 1897, exceeded the lawful debt limit of Weber county; and

"Whereas, This board deems it proper that no warrants issued or obligations incurred prior to Jan. 4, 1897, should be paid until such time as this board is able to definitely ascertain on what day the lawfully authorized debt limit of Weber county was reached. Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, By the board of county commissioners of Weber county, Utah, in regular meeting, that the county treasurer be and he is hereby directed not to redeem nor register for payment any warrants issued prior to Jan. 4, 1897, until such time as this board shall take further action in this matter, save and except, however, those proper charges against the county which are fixed and established by law."

THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Successful Meeting Last Night—Election of Officers.

The meeting held last night in the court house under the auspices of the Free Public Library association was a very successful affair, and showed that great interest exists in the library and its work. The business of the session was done thoroughly and well, while the amusement features of the occasion were first-class and thoroughly enjoyable. The newly-elected officers begin their terms with more hopeful prospects for the success of the library than it has ever enjoyed.

The reports of the officers showed the institution in a very flourishing condition. The features of the entertainment were the "Shadow Song," by Mrs. Anderson; the tenor solo, and the selection by little Bessie Brown.

Professor J. F. Engle gave an address on "The Schools and the Library," showing that the latter had been a great aid to the public school work and how the public library system of the country is useful in preserving national character. In his judgment more harm is done by pernicious literature than by the grog shop.

Mrs. Dr. Coulter made an address on "Clubs and the Library," showing the great assistance to be derived by the clubs from the free library in Ogden and giving a brief outline of the work which the women's clubs are doing, not only in Ogden, but throughout the country. She gave statistics showing over 110,000 members in the various women's clubs in the United States, and asserted as her belief that the movement is one of the most important of the century.

The ladies of the library wish to specially thank Mrs. McCartney for assistance in the musical programme, and also J. E. Foulkes for the free use of a piano.

The election of directors resulted as follows: Mesdames Breeden, Briggs, Bannister, Coulter, Emerson, Ellen H. Gideon, Gordon, Marshall, Pattin, Pratt, Rainsford Smith, E. H. Wright and Miss Minnie Kiesel.

FREE KINDERGARTEN WORK.

Association to Give a Reception Tuesday Next.

The meeting of the Free Kindergarten association held Monday was a special one to hear reports of the executive board relating to a reception to be given the officers and members of the association and the public; also to learn what action the state organization had taken regarding the request sent them by our association that all local associations be admitted to the state organization with a view that all in a short time will come into the national organization.

President Emerson read a letter from the chairman of the executive board in Salt Lake, stating that a request had come before the committee meeting and action was taken pertaining to membership of local associations. It was decided that each local association pay a membership fee to the state organization, which would entitle it to representation and two votes at the annual election.

The secretary of the state organization sent a copy of resolutions from the committee on legislation, which were as follows:

That the State Kindergarten association endorse an appropriation for the University of Utah sufficient to maintain a kindergarten training department of high grade in connection with the state normal school.

That we favor the re-enactment of H. B. No. 135, an act permitting school boards to establish kindergartens.

That the kindergarten association, through the legislative committee, appear before the committee on education in the legislature and urge such legislation as will bring into effect the suggestions before stated.

The reports of the entertainment committees were given.

The reports of the committees were given and it was decided that the association give their reception Tuesday evening, February 2, using the high school building rooms for the occasion.

We trust that the object of this reception or entertainment will be realized in awakening in the public an interest in kindergarten work and a desire to help further that work by assisting to bring children into the school for, as has often been said, the hope of the nation depends on the education and early training of the children.

The Hackett Matter.

Requisition papers were procured yesterday and Sheriff Belnap left last night for Omaha to bring back George Hackett. The papers used in evidence before the grand jury and filed in the clerk's office with the indictment show that Hackett and C. L. Blazer and George T. Harris had things pretty much their own way in the management of the bank. A bill head shows that George T. Harris was president and George Hackett cashier.

The capital stock of the concern was put at $100,000. Among the exhibits are notes, one of George T. Harris for $5,000, and one twice that sum signed by Hackett, they having, it seems, lent the bank's money to themselves.

North Ogden News.

Monday evening in north Ogden, Florence, the daughter of William Montgomery, was painfully burned while lighting a fire with kerosene. She saturated fuel with oil and bent over to light it, when there was a sudden burst of flame which burned her face severely.

At a mass meeting of Democrats Joseph Cazier was nominated for road supervisor, he receiving 31 votes against 18 by his chief opponent, James Deemer. The meeting allowed Republicans to vote, but not to put candidates in nomination, a privilege which many of them used.

THE OGDEN SUICIDE.

He Was Aaron McAllister and Was Well Known in San Francisco.

San Francisco, Jan. 26.—Aaron McAllister, who suicided at Ogden, was a well known character in this city. While working in the woods near Tacoma in December, 1895, he claimed that a spirit came out of the clouds and gave him a message to go preach to the people that the end of the world was near. The next day he sold all he had and paid all his debts, which left him without a cent. With his wife and little boy he started out to tramp from Tacoma to Oakland, in the middle of winter, often sleeping by the roadside at night and begging for food in the morning. In May he issued a call to the people to prepare for the end of the world. In his manifesto he declared that Christ would come to earth on July 1, 1896, and would take the sanctified into the clouds for three and a half years.

In the latter part of June McAllister tried to organize a small army of sanctified Christians for the purpose of making a trip to the hills and trying to get aboard the clouds for the projected tour. His plan, however, met with dismal failure.

The first of July passed and the followers of the "prophet" lost faith in him. McAllister disappeared from Oakland a short time after and the last heard of him by his friends here was that he and his family were tramping to Los Angeles. They made their living by begging.
