MEETING OF TEACHERS.

The following were appointed to look after the different departments of work for the convention: Kindergarten, Miss Mary C. May of Salt Lake; primary, Miss Ella Larson of Pleasant Green; grammar, D. O. McKay of Ogden; secondary college, Professor Cummings of the University; superintendency, A. C. Nelson; school school board.

THE TRAMP HAD A GOOD TIME.

"I'm Simply Admiring Things," He Said When Asked to Explain.

(New York Herald.)

Greenwich, Conn.—At least one tramp in the world thoroughly enjoyed himself yesterday, for it is not given to every one of the breed to survey the natural glories of Commodore E. C. Benedict's estate, or dine off sandwiches on the commodore's private yacht, and to ride to the lock-up in the commodore's private carriage. Such, however, was the blissful experience of a terrestrial wanderer yesterday.

"I'm Irish, and my name is James Dalton. That's all you want to know? Who are you?"

This was the way the tramp replied yesterday to Benjamin Fenner, the secretary of Commodore E. C. Benedict, when found wandering about the Benedict estate.

"I'm simply admiring things," he added in explanation.

The tramp was of medium size. His face was supposed to be clean shaven, his hair cut short, and his eyes seemed to betoken a lack of intelligence. He wore a flannel shirt, a blue coat and waistcoat, a pair of overalls held in place by a strap, and a pair of broad shoes.

He entered the Benedict estate during the morning hours, and took in all the beauties of the place. After visiting the lake in which former President Grover Cleveland had a stock of bass he went to the stables and the gardener's cottage, where he peeped in the windows. He then entered the greenhouses, where there is a large assortment of choice tropical plants and early vegetables, and made himself thoroughly at home, doing, however, no damage.

Mr. Fenner discovered the visitor on the grounds later in the morning and ordered him off. The man went, but as he had failed to get a good look at the Benedict mansion and at the noted yacht Oneida, which lay in her slip close by, he returned in the afternoon to complete his tour of investigation.

All the men on the place were so busy with their labors that he passed unnoticed, save by their wives, who were afraid to leave their homes and give an alarm. The tramp was evidently impressed by the spring verdure, the budding trees, the singing birds and last, but not least, the Benedict mansion, which is practically deserted through the cold months, save during the holiday season. If the doors had been open he would undoubtedly have entered, but as they were not, he contented himself with looking in the windows.

It was about 6 o'clock when hunger overtook him, and walking to the wharf he boarded the yacht Oneida. He ascended the stairs leading to the cook's galley and somewhat surprised the cook's assistant, who was eating his evening meal.

"Hello, I'm just in time," remarked the tramp as he sat down to the table. The assistant looked sharply at him and then handing him two sandwiches told him to get above as quickly as he could. The tramp replied, "Certainly," and ran up on deck and went ashore, but not before he had thoroughly viewed the vessel.

Mr. Fenner again encountered him a few minutes later and this time ordered Special Constable William Sergeant, who had just come on duty, to arrest him. In Mr. Benedict's carriage the man rode in state to the village jail, where he was locked up as a tramp. He expressed himself as charmed with the ride.

In the borough court this morning Mr. Fenner said the man was more to be protected than prosecuted, and Judge Barnes thereupon had Prosecuting Attorney Wright change the complaint to read "vagrant," instead of "tramp," so that he might impose a lighter sentence. So the "vagrant" was sent to Bridgeport jail for thirty days.

The Ladies' Literary club met with Mrs. W. Douglass Wednesday afternoon. "Anti-Slavery Leaders" was the title of an interesting paper read by Mrs. Homer. A very interesting paper on the life of Mrs. Harriett Beecher Stowe, by Mrs. R. Harris, and "History of Slavery in America," by Mrs. Fulton. Mrs. Richard Lee was a guest of the afternoon.

The Coterie.—The annual meeting of the Coterie occurred last Tuesday at the residence of Mrs. Ransford Smith, and was happily varied by reason of the presence of the following guests: Mesdames Abbott, Aucutt, Bruce, Bent, Emerson, A. C. Emerson, Gallaudet, Hyde, Kiesel, Kelly, Metcalf, Ridgway and Miss Walker. The historian's report by Mrs. L. B. Adams contained not only the year's historical statistics, but most original and interesting allusions to the work pursued by the club.

In line of business, the election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the unanimous choice of Mrs. Perkins for president; Mrs. Bigelow, vice president; Mrs. Patton, secretary and treasurer, and Mrs. Adams, historian. All were glad to welcome Mrs. Emerson back into the ranks of active membership, as well as to admit Miss Kimball a new member.

A delightful social hour was the happy ending of another pleasant and profitable year in the club's annals.

In conclusion, she read an article upon "The Coronation," written by an eye-witness. Mrs. Corfman gave a review of "The Sawers," a novel of Russian society life.

The club has lost, by removal to Salt Lake, not only its president, but one of its oldest and most efficient members, Mrs. E. A. Wedgwood. Her resignation was regretfully accepted, and she was made an honorary member of the club, whose members will look forward to occasional visits from her.

The next meeting will be devoted to the election of officers for the ensuing year.

Park City Clubs.

Park City, May 4.—Last Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. John Delms, the Woman's Athenaeum held its regular meeting. The main feature was a debate between Mrs. George E. Hedges and Mrs. J. W. Geiger, the question being, "Resolved, That a College Education Is Best for Our Girls." Both arguments were excellent. The negative was taken by Mrs. Geiger, and the affirmative by Mrs. Hedges. On a vote being taken the decision was given for the negative. It was an interesting meeting. Rollcall, after which "America" was sung, and the club adjourned to meet with Mrs. J. W. Geiger, Monday, May 13.

A VEXED QUESTION SETTLED.

It is a conceded fact that Magazine Advertising, while expensive, is more lasting and effective than any kind. The newspaper is usually picked up by the father or mother, glanced over and thrown down—generally being used the next morning to kindle the fire with, whereas the magazine is conned over by each member of the family, read and often re-read, the contents carefully noted, even to the advertising pages; it is then often loaned to the neighbor and finally when the next number is out it is laid on the shelf and kept until the end of the volume, frequently being taken down for reference, and the advertising pages are again brought into view. This may be illustrated in almost any home in Utah or surrounding states with the Juvenile Instructor, this popular magazine being found in nearly every home on account of its being the Sunday school Organ and having been organized over thirty-five years.
