Salt Laker's Family Sustains a Heavy Loss at Jacksonville.

Paul F. Nolan, secretary to Traffic Manager Babcock of the Rio Grande Western railroad, was advised by wire yesterday that his father, Judge George M. Nolan of Jacksonville, Fla., had sustained heavy losses in the disastrous fire that overtook that city Friday last. The dispatch read: "City in ruins. Burned out."

This means the destruction of Judge Nolan's $25,000 home in the residence district, and it is doubtful that the property was insured. Mr. Nolan, who lived in Jacksonville prior to coming to Salt Lake, says the fire in that city, from the descriptions he has read, covered an area as great as from Tenth South to Fourth North and from Main street to Seventh East, every house and business block within those boundaries being destroyed.

Mr. Nolan's brother occupied a set of offices in one of the buildings which burned, and his valuable law library probably has gone up in flames. Naturally the young man feels great concern, but he is relieved by assurances from home that no member of his family was injured in the fire.

Jakey Katzmeyer Causes Sensation With His Noisy Clothes.

All is explained. It is quite simple. The wonder is that nobody guessed it before. Now that the flood is over, the community is calmer. Men have had time to think. When he got off the train yesterday morning at the Rio Grande Western depot there was a panic. The wires stopped working, just as they did the other night with Jakey 200 miles away. Women screamed. Strong men's hearts failed them. The police could do nothing. The engineer who brought the train in was completely overcome. He could not make his report. The depot patrolman went off watch. It was a rip-snorter, a flabbergaster, something Kansas has never seen the like of. All was confusion. Chaos ensued, where quiet reigned. The shock was felt distinctly at Uvada. And Jake says, in justification, that they are wearing them in Buffalo. His name is Jacob Katzmeyer, and he is known familiarly as "Jakey." Up to a short while ago he was chief engineer in Dillon & Morgan's kitchen. There, unfortunately, he acquired enough of the common circulating medium to give him the idea that it was up to him to go to Buffalo. Which he did. Nobody knows how it came about, but some undue influence was brought to bear on Jakey's mind in the Pan-American city regarding the matter of wearing apparel. It is the belief of his friends that he heard J. Waldere Kirke had gone bughouse. At any rate, he laid plans to make J. Waldere look much like a plugged dime. He was fairly successful, and the good citizens of Salt Lake endured the fruits yesterday.

As Jakey stood in front of the White Front, early in the morning, the costume favored the public with a series of monologues. As the day went on, it grew more boisterous. Baseball managers were after it to succeed the few thousand rooters who are growing lukewarm in the faith. Had they been able to get near enough some one of them would have got it. Once Griffin was on the verge of speaking to it. Then John Heid tried to engage it, but he, too, could not make himself heard above the din. The band will have to go right along with the ordinary bass drum and tuba. Wash Young, who wants a searchlight for the street fair, threatened to negotiate with Jakey, but it is not believed he was serious. So the costume went through the day without being purchased or confiscated, and this morning it will go to Butte, accompanied by Jakey.

Will somebody play the Doxology?

This costume of Jakey's begins with a tie like unto a crazy quilt, but twice as large, in which scintillates a rock three and a quarter inches in diameter. The whole encircles a collar as high as a fence. The coat beggars description. It has a light background, but red, blue, pink and yellow, cross-sectioned with lavender and Irish green, leaves but a slight suggestion as to its original hue. An effort has evidently been made to put a check in the pattern. At a distance the check shows up some.

Each check is seven inches square. The vest is the same effect, except that all the colors not in the coat have been put into it. These are maroon, brown, black and white. The rainbow is not in the same class with Jakey's vest. The trousers are the same as the coat, but instead of the checkered effect, we have diagonal stripes meeting at angles all the way down, green intermingling with purple and gold, the whole making a beautiful picture.

Some one said yesterday that Jakey was here to appear before Senator Kearns in the interest of a wall paper firm, but this is considered a base slander by Jakey's friends. Manager Mulvey expressed regret that he did not see the costume yesterday, as it would have been a great aid to him in getting combinations for the Salt Palace electric fountain.

George H. Sims Denies Existence of a Dray Trust.

Inquiry yesterday developed the fact that the drayage trust alleged by B. D. Blackmarr in his suit with the B. & O. Transfer company is not a very formidable one.

George H. Sims, manager of the Salt Lake Transfer company, said that there was very little to Blackmarr's allegation that a combination existed between the different drayage companies whereby all competition was being destroyed.

"There is nothing to it," said Mr. Sims. "I presume that Mr. Blackmarr bases his allegation on the fact that the several drayage and transfer concerns sometime since signed an agreement that none of them would move a piano for less than $2 and $2.50 when it had to be taken to or from upstair apartments.

"This is a feature of our business that carries considerable risk of liability for damage, and we all came to the conclusion that an established price for such work should be maintained. Other than that there is no agreement between any of the transfer companies existing. Of that I am positive."

HOW INDIANS ARE ROBBED.

Report on the Condition of the Service in the United States.

New York, May 5.—A report by the investigating committee on the National Civil Service Reform league on conditions of the Indian service, with particular reference to the appointment of agents under the present administration, has been presented to the council of the league. The facts and recommendations contained in the result have also been submitted to President McKinley. The report says, in part:

"Under the system of patronage appointments, these wards of the nation have in many cases been despoiled by fraudulent contracts, whereby the agents have obtained large sums of money in violation of law, while the morals of the Indians have been corrupted by the example of caretakers, who are often drunken, brutal, licentious and dishonest.

"Recently the secretary of the interior requested that the bids for the leasing of the Indian lands should be opened and the leases awarded in Washington, under the direct supervision of the Indian bureau, and not, as formerly, upon the reservations. The result of this system and of the exposure of the fraudulent use of Indian lands already shows a net gain to the Indians of about $150,000, the greater part was upon the Osage reservation alone. Nothing could better illustrate the enormous waste and presumptive peculations which have existed in the past in respect to this one feature of Indian administration.

"A number of instances are cited, showing how agents have abused their power for their own pecuniary benefit and with demoralizing consequences to the Indians. The report says it seems evident that whatever temporary improvement may be made by changes in the personnel of the Indian service, no lasting reform can be inaugurated without a change in the system itself.

"It is submitted that under section 1753 of the revised statutes the chief executive has the right to promulgate regulations declaring that all appointments of Indian agents hereafter shall be made by promotion from the superintendents of Indian schools and from the other higher grades on the classified Indian service and by details from the army. In pursuance of this statute, an inspector might be selected by the president from the classified service to ascertain and report the relative qualifications of the different persons in this service eligible for appointment.

Purchases Fine Picture.
