An Evening Echo.

Know most of the rooms of thy native country before thou goest over the threshold thereof.—FULLER.

The administration newspapers are practically unanimous in declaring that President Wilson has achieved a great diplomatic victory over Germany. In view of the announcement that Germany will probably make no reply to the latest American note sent in answer to the last German communication, it would seem that this great "victory" consists in having talked the kaiser to a standstill.

The Shipping Bill.

Taking the measure in its entire scope, and reading the committee report carefully, an impartial mind can not avoid the impression that many things are not what they seem. It is, in fact, not too severe to say that the shipping bill of this year is sailing under false colors. It still pretends to be an emergency measure, as was the case when the scheme was first broached by Secretary McAdoo and the president more than a year ago. We were then told that legislation must be rushed through to relieve the shipping difficulties brought about by the war. But that argument is now worn so thin that it can hardly be used any longer with a grave face. Yet the bill seeks to relate itself to the war situation, though its sponsors are well aware of the high probability that peace will have come before a single ship can be built under its terms.

Indeed, the more narrowly the measure is scrutinized the more apparent does it become that the building or buying and operating of ships by the government have now fallen to a secondary place in the whole plan. The main thing provided for is the creation of a shipping board, with powers over transport by water analogous to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission over transport by rail.

Bryan's Manufactured Issue.

Perhaps in pursuance with the proposal he is credited with having advanced some time ago, to write the Democratic platform, Mr. Bryan has issued an article under his signature that is remarkable in a number of ways. In the first place he quite frankly concedes the probability of defeat of President Wilson both in his admission that he is a "minority president" and in his search for "recruits that will give the party a fighting chance." He conceives the party to be further weakened by the alienation of German and Irish Democrats due to certain of the president's actions in connection with the European war, and then proceeds to outline a plan embodying his ideas as to how the Democratic party may overcome this handicap.

The scheme is ingenious and eminently Bryanesque. He proposes that the president shall without delay take advantage of the powers and prestige of his position to institute a peace movement directed toward the warring nations of Europe, to the end that he may be able to pose before the American people as the "peace candidate" and thus conciliate the pacifist element of the Republican party. In short the article of Mr. Bryan is a candid admission that there is nothing in the record of the administration during the last three years that can be made to serve as an issue on which to stand in the coming campaign, so an issue must be manufactured, and he proposes to erect the false one of "peace," says the Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

A Faded Platform.

Democrats engaged in drawing up a statement of party principles for the national convention in St. Louis next month will have at hand the platform of four years ago. It is a curiosity now. Having ceased to be a guide, it will serve as a warning. Its concluding plaint said, in a burst of tenacity of purpose: "Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied on during the campaign." Looking around for the fulfillment is now in order. Since the present administration began the Democrats have controlled all branches of the government. They have had full power to act from March 4, 1913, and will retain it until March 4, next. They have had an exceptionally good opportunity to keep their pledges. But the failures are numerous and remarkable. The re-nomination of Wilson is certain. Yet the platform reads: "We favor a single presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the constitution making the president of the United States ineligible for re-election, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle." The candidate has decided to ignore the pledge and the party approves the action. So the party does not keep its pledges, but expressly violates them, with the active co-operation of its pledged candidate. The plea of changed circumstances would have been urged regardless of the course of events.

First in the platform is the free trade plank, which must now be read in the light of the sugar fiasco and the Democratic talk of protecting the country against the dumping of foreign goods. "The high cost of living," declares another plank, "is a serious problem in every American home. The Republican party in its platform, attempts to escape from responsibility for present conditions by denying that they are due to a protective tariff." Present prices under a Democratic tariff are a sufficient commentary on this point. "A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable." The soaring price of gasoline is a sample of how Democrats stop monopolies. "We denounce the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses." And the more recent Democratic Congresses have been appropriating more than ever. A merchant marine is promised. Where is it? An immediate declaration on Philippine independence was pledged. A bill to fix a definite date has been defeated by Democrats voting with Republicans against the plan to scuttle. No matter where the last Democratic platform is analyzed, the trail of double dealing or inefficiency is found.

The Democratic platform of 1916 should be printed in parallel columns with that of 1912. It will be a deadly comparison.

THE DAILY NOVELET

BUG THE BEGGAR.

Safety first is a good motto, but a safe robbery is never as safe as it sounds.—Prof. Slim.

(Translated from the Chinese.)

There was a hole in a fence in the province of Sai-Ko, and Bug the beggar did pause thereat and murmur, "What a beautiful hole! Truly I must do something with that."

And he did stand with his back to it with his left arm thrust through it even up to the elbow, and then he held out his empty hat and exclaimed, "Oh, good people, witness a man who had his left arm cut off in a shooting cracker factory. Alms, for the love of Mica."

And no one heeded him and his empty hat remained so.

So Bug the beggar thrust his right leg through the hole, and exclaimed thus: "Oh, elegant people, behold a man who hath had his leg bitten off by a white white innocently fishing for minnows. Alms, for the love of Petrarch!"

And still he was not heeded. So he thrust his whole body through the hole, so that only his head and chest were visible, and thus he exclaimed: "Oh, generous people, regard a man who hath had three-quarters of his body blown away in the Kow-Mein wars."

And lo and behold, the populace, murmuring, "Poor califf, we will slip like a gen or so and save ourselves the trouble and expense of giving checks to the war relief committees," did shower his hat with unexpected tiny dollars, was rich enough to buy a Pawtamalina car and ride about screaming like a gentleman.

CARDALE TO QUIT GREECE

Where He Has Acted in Capacity of Britisher and Admiral of Greek Army.

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)

ATHENS, Greece, June 9.—It is announced that Rear Admiral Hubert S. Cardale, the acting head of the British naval mission in Greece and at present the ranking officer of the Royal Hellenic navy on active service, will soon relinquish his post and leave Greece. He has been one of the most prominent figures in Athens during the war, for in his dual capacity as a Britisher and an admiral of the Greek navy, he has been a factor in quieting many of the international dissensions in this country, which, ever since the war started has been the scene of a continual pulling and hauling of warring interests.

One day Admiral Cardale has been called upon to pronounce for "the king's party" and again, on the next day to speak for the Venizelists, the adherents of the popular statesman who desired to see Greece take up arms against the Central powers. The admiral appears to have been a favorite of both King Constantine and Venizelos. His relations with the royal family are of long standing, beginning with his service under the personal command of the then Crown Prince Constantine in the first Balkan war. Recently the king acted as god-father to the admiral's son, naming the infant Constantine.

On the outbreak of the European war in 1914 Admiral Cardale, securing leave from the Greek government, took the squad of British naval gunners in Serbia in hand, organized the British, French and Russian heavy artillery defenses of Belgrade, successfully mined the Danube and the Save, sunk a few Austrian monitors, wore the uniform of a Serbian colonel of engineers for months, received the order and star of the white eagle of Serbia from the hands of King Peter himself, and the Kanageorge medal for personal bravery.

Java is estimated to have exported 85,000,000 pounds of tea in 1915, as compared with 65,000,000 pounds the year before.

NOTICE TO WATER CONSUMERS

All water consumers desiring to use a lawn or street sprinkler in connection with the domestic supply must first obtain a permit from the office, and any person or persons using city water without first obtaining such permit shall be liable to a fine of two dollars per day for every day said water is so used.

In sprinkling streets each water taker must confine himself to the number of feet mentioned in his permit. Nozzles larger than one-fourth inch will not be permitted, except upon additional charge, and sprinkling without a nozzle is forbidden.

Sprinkling streets and lawns is restricted to two hours per day, one hour between 5 and 10 a. m. and one hour between 5 and 8 p. m. If a street sprinkler or hose is found out of order, leaking or used for any other purpose than that for which it was intended, the supply will be discontinued without previous notice.

In deference to the general interest the use of a hose is strictly prohibited during the continuance of a fire, or while the fire pressure is maintained, except to protect property in danger of burning.

Patrons who are paying for sprinkler privilege will not be required to renew their permits. There is no fractional part of a sprinkling season which runs from June 1st, to September 1st, inclusive.
