GRIM MAY BE PUT IN POWER

Rumored Appointment to Take Charge of the Syndicate Railroads.

All Lines to Be Reorganized and Made Into One Perfect System.

The Eighth-Street Road Will Probably Be Soon Added to the Allied Lines.

OAKLAND OFFICE SAN FRANCISCO CALL, 908 Broadway, July 28.

It was stated to-day that A. K. Grim, who was superintendent of the Berkeley consolidated lines for some years, is to be made general superintendent of all the lines controlled or owned by the syndicate as soon as Secretary Havens returns from the East. Two weeks ago some comment was made on the fact that Mr. Grim appeared before the Board of Equalization and represented the owners of the Grove-street system.

During the past year the syndicate has acquired several roads, and will probably soon take in another—the Eighth-street road—and each is being run under a separate superintendent. The purpose of consolidating the roads was to economize in their management and to arrange a system that will be more uniform regarding time and transfers than was possible among many individual lines.

An attempt was made to consolidate every line in the city, and it was reported that an option was obtained upon them by Will G. Henshaw when he went East three months ago, but the deal fell through.

Now that the Realty Syndicate has succeeded in combining many of the lines an effort is to be made to take advantage of the reorganization and to model a system that will prevent the managers having to tell such tales of woe to the Supervisors every year when stating the condition of their roads. Already several lines that once generated individual power are using the current from one common source, and with the experience gained by several years of practice it is believed that other changes equally desirable can be made.

Mr. Grim was superintendent of the Berkeley line when it was first opened and remained so until the Twelfth-street line was taken in by the syndicate.

To Formulate an Ordinance.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 28.—The Ordinance and Judiciary Committee of the City Council will meet to-morrow evening in the Council chambers to discuss the tuberculin test and formulate an ordinance to be submitted to the Council.

The Board of Health, Market, Meat and Milk Inspector and several prominent dairymen, besides the press representatives, will be invited to be present and submit their views upon this important theme. The City Attorney, as well as the other members of the Council, is expected; but as the discussion will be long and uninteresting to outsiders it is not expected that many others will be present. The outcome of this meeting will be watched with interest.

Ran Away From Home.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 28.—Mrs. Mary Rose, a widow living on Peralta street, has reported her nine-year-old son missing. He left home some time yesterday afternoon, and no trace of his whereabouts can be found. His mother is nearly crazed with grief.

WILL CLOSE SATURDAY.

Alameda County's Third Industrial Exposition Has Been a Success.

Berkeley Folks Do Not Take Kindly to Having a Special Night for Their Benefit.

OAKLAND OFFICE SAN FRANCISCO CALL, 908 Broadway, July 28.

There are only three more days of the exposition, and the interest is very great as the end approaches. To-night there was a good attendance to hear the works of local composers. The programme as carried out was as follows:

March, "Cedric Charles" (Charles H. Currie); overture, "Vaudeville" (George Koppitz); (a) schottische, "Edna" (J. G. Gomez); (b) waltz song, "Two Little Chums" (J. A. Zander); (a) schottische (Dr. C. T. Wilson); (b) caprice, "The Rose Festival" (John C. Walling); march, "The Belle of Oakland" (J. E. Whitehead); (a) "The Wave Schottische" (Julius Oettl); (b) "The Brownies' Dance" (Neil M. Connor); Cosmos Waltzes" (Alma A. Crowley); march, "Annexation" (C. H. Russell); (a) march, "Fin de Siecle" (Violet Wheeler Buckner); (b) "Dance of the Poppies" (Dorothy Goodsell); overture, "Forlosa" (Theo Vogt), conducted by the composer; song, "Sweet Evenings Come and Go" (John W. Metcalf), Miss Dorothy Goodsell; piano solo, (a) Intermezzo Pastorale, (b) Valse Caprice, E flat (John W. Metcalf); songs, (a) Serenade, (b) "Swinging on the Apple Tree" (Alma A. Crowley); songs, (a) "Absent" (John W. Metcalf); (b) "Let All Obey" (Stephen W. Leach), George B. McBride; song, "My Pretty Blossom" (Goodsell), Miss Dorothy Goodsell; march, "The Belle of San Francisco" (Jay H. Toler).

To-morrow night was set apart for Berkeleyans, but the people of the college town have not yet provided a programme and have not taken cordially to the idea, so the following programme has been arranged:

Selections by the Oakland Exposition Band; song and dance, "Honey, of the Southern Belles," Miss Lulu Borein; dance, "Comin' thro' the Rye," Miss Maud Goodwin; song and dance, "I'm Happy ma Baby's Come to Town," the Misses Annie and Lulu Borein; trapeze performance, Messrs. Conlon and Turner of the Acme Club; recitation, "The Red Jacket," Miss Grace Wentworth of New York; serpentine, "La Petite," Miss Birdie Gage; dance Polish, Miss Beth Hamilton; selection, Berkeley Glee Club; dance French, imitation of the famous "Pas Seul" of Yvette Guilbert, Beth Hamilton and Lulu Borein; selections by the Exposition Band.

While the Exposition has not been quite so largely attended as in the past, owing to the date being altered to suit the Christian Endeavorers, it has been a success in every way. If it had opened six weeks later, when parents and pupils were all returned from their vacations, the attendance would have been larger, but it is felt that the benefit of securing the thousands of Endeavorers more than compensates for the financial difference. The exposition is a semi-public corporation and no effort is made to make money beyond expenses.

THE MARKET-STREET "GANG" ON TRIAL.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 28.—The examination of Barchi Perata, Frank Nolan, William Marsh and William Viers, who are alleged to be the members of the Sporting Life gang, is going on in Judge Allen's court. For some years these gangs have been very quiet, but recently the four men in the dock, it is alleged, broke into the house of William Aird and violently assaulted a woman. The police claim to be certain of conviction and the youths have retained several prominent attorneys. The defense, it is said, will be an alibi. The trial attracts an immense lobby daily.

SHOOTING IN A PEACEFUL CAMP

Robbers Try to Steal the Money of the Salvation Army.

Sergeant-Major Brown Came on the Scene With a Pistol.

Fired to the Left and the Thieves Ran Off in the Opposite Direction.

OAKLAND OFFICE SAN FRANCISCO CALL, 908 Broadway, July 28.

The firing of shots at midnight rudely disturbed the hundreds of campers in the Salvation Army camp at Trestle Glen. The presence of robbers in the camp made the shooting necessary, but Sergeant-Major Brown, who handled the gun, injured no one, as he purposely turned the barrel away from the thieves.

For some time it has been known that there have been evil-disposed persons on the grounds, and a sharp eye has been kept on them. As there is no steel vault on the ground it frequently happens that a large sum of money is left in the treasurer's valise. This represents the proceeds of the restaurant, the voluntary offerings, and, on special occasions, the price of admission to entertainments. Sometimes it amounts to over a couple of hundred dollars, after a crowded day like last Sunday, when there was a public wedding.

The Salvationists had all retired Monday night when two reports of a pistol resounded through the glen. Instantly hundreds of tent screens were thrown aside and all kinds of heads peeped out into the darkness, while everybody feared to speak for fear the voice might render his head a target for the next bullet.

Adjutant Sam Wood, Major Winchell and several others went in the direction of the shooting as soon as they could and found Sergeant-Major Brown standing near the treasurer's tent. He soon explained the shooting. He had hidden himself away where he could watch the actions of two suspicious looking men whose appearance he did not like. He saw them approach the treasurer's tent, and as he knew they had no business there he crept up and awaited developments.

One of the men satisfied himself that the inmates of the tent were asleep and the other kept watch. When it became evident that they were about to stealthily enter the tent Brown shouted to them, and they took to their heels as fast as possible. The sergeant-major then fired a couple of shots, and thus aroused the whole camp, for Salvationists are accustomed to all kinds of warfare except that which pertains to gunpowder and bullets.

Sergeant-Major Brown was very careful not to hit the robbers. His bullets would have had to travel all around the world to hit those thieves, for he fired in the opposite direction. He explained this by saying that it is not the creed of Salvationists to maim the wicked, but to bring them to their knees by repentance. The shots were fired to frighten the robbers off and to let them know that even Salvationists do not care to have their goods stolen. The experiment was successful.

BOLD THIEVES.

Steal Copper Wire From the Electric Railroad Tracks on the Marsh.

ALAMEDA, CAL., July 28.—Where the electric railroad crosses the marsh on Webster street the rails and ties are not filled in and are exposed for the entire distance. As a result the insulated copper wire which binds the rails together is also exposed. This wire is valuable, and will sell for 5 cents a pound at the junkshops which receive stolen goods, though really worth much more.

Yesterday afternoon two young hoodlums belonging in Oakland and San Francisco attempted to steal a lot of the wire, but were caught in the attempt. They were hard at work when a car came along on which Deputy Sheriff Heller was a passenger. The motorman called his attention to the thieves, who, seeing that they were observed, started to run away. Heller and several of the passengers gave chase.

Call was arrested on the street, but when Green saw that he was hard pressed he took to one of the creeks that traverses the marsh, and which is nearly waist deep in soft mud. Here he floundered around for some time, refusing to surrender, until finally Heller went in after him and brought him out. Both were plastered with mud, but Green was landed in jail. Both men were brought to Alameda this morning for trial, and both pleaded guilty but were not sentenced.

NICE POINT OF LAW.

Civil Code Amendment Which Knocks Out Technical Appeals in Court.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 28.—Attorneys for the Spring Valley Water Company sprang a surprise on both the Judge and plaintiff's attorneys to-day when they produced an amendment to the Civil Code, in court, knocking out an appeal on purely technical grounds. The case on trial was Beard vs. the Spring Valley Water Company over riparian rights. Beard had been defeated and was appealing for a new trial when the defendant's attorneys called the court's attention to the Civil Code, section 475, chapter VIII, under the heading of mistakes. It reads as follows:

The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error, improper ruling, instruction or defect in the pleading or proceedings which, in the opinion of said court, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. No judgment, ruling or decree shall be reversed or affected by reason of any error, ruling, instruction or defect, unless it shall appear from the record that such error, ruling, instruction or defect was prejudiced, and also that by reason of such error, ruling, instruction or defect the said party complaining or appealing sustained and suffered substantial injury and that a different result would have been probable if such error, ruling, instruction or defect had not occurred or existed. There shall be no presumption that error is prejudiced or that injury was done if error is shown.

This was signed March 26 of this year and went into effect immediately. On this showing Judge Ellsworth continued the case till Monday next to render his decision.

A PET SCHOOL HUMBLED

Principal McChesney Declares That the Action Was Unwarranted.

Examination in English at the High School Said to Be Unfair.

OAKLAND OFFICE SAN FRANCISCO CALL, 908 Broadway, July 28.

There is great consternation among the graduates and pupils of the High School, because it has been discredited in English language at the State University. The faculty of the school is greatly displeased and declare that the examinations on which the decision is based was manifestly unfair.

According to Principal McChesney of the High School, Professor Bradley, the head of the department of English in the State University, called at the High School on a day when there was no time for an examination. It was a lecture day and only half an hour could be spared for the purpose.

The examination was based on two verses of "Snow Bound," which were written on the blackboard. The pupils were requested to state in what poem the verses were used, and in what connection; to state in prose the meaning conveyed; to explain what rule governed the construction of the verses. On those questions depended the standing of the Oakland High School with regard to the university.

The instructor in English in the High School is Miss Packard. She states that "Snow Bound" is not on the list of books from which examinations are to be made for entrance to the university. Her pupils had not read or studied the work for two years previous to the visit of the professor.

The Oakland High School has always boasted of being one of the foremost in the State and the disgrace of being discredited in English is keenly felt. There are many graduates from the High School, and unless they take the entrance examination on August 9 they will have to be content with a limited instead of a regular course.

Superintendent McClymonds said to-day that he was greatly surprised at Professor Bradley's action and was at a loss to understand it.

"It certainly is no fault of our system of teaching," said Mr. McClymds, "and I am surprised at the discrediting of any branch of our High School. Of course nothing will be left undone to have the standing of the school raised to the required level forthwith."

An attempt will be made to present the matter to the academic council committee of the university and to try and induce it to disregard the recommendations of Professor Bradley in the matter, but as he is a member of the committee this course does not hold out much hope.

CRAVING FOR THE KLONDYKE

Grave Danger of a Stampede of the Fair-Craven Jury.

FEAR ONLY THE COURT'S WRATH.

Attorney Mitchell, Worsted at Repartee, Riles and Talks Fight.

HE WAS REBUKED BY THE COURT.

Reuben H. Lloyd Tells the Story of Senator Fair's Desire to Wed Mrs. Craven.

The Klondyke gold excitement is getting serious.

It has already had the effect of separating families, breaking up business concerns and setting daft entire communities. Now it threatens the Fair-Craven trial.

Three of the jurors who have so patiently for the past quarter of a year waited for at least one side of the great case to be presented, are exhibiting premonitions of impatience and gold fever in their most rabid type, and it begins to look as though Judge Slack will have to keep a sharp eye out, or he will wake up some fine morning and find that the entire dozen of his assistants are not in court to answer roll-call—and won't be there again unless a local bench-warrant prove efficacious in the vicinity of the north pole.

"What could they do to a fellow, I wonder, if he should just all of a sudden forget that he was on this jury and skip out for the gold fields?" asked one of the panel, yesterday, while speaking confidentially to a friend. "If I thought that there would be no very serious results, don't you know I would do it in a minute. I'm going to find out about it any way. This is the most unfortunate predicamene I ever got into. There are two or three more on the jury with whom I have talked who tell me that they are in the same fix. They want to start for the Klondyke, and would do so right off, but that they fear the wrath of the court."

It was suggested to the troubled juror that while nothing serious might happen to him during his absence, it would be when he returned gold-laden to his native heath that the heavy hand of the law would fall upon him.

"That's the very thing I have thought of," he said, shaking his head sadly. "It's too bad. Here we were led to believe that this confounded trial would not last over three months at the very most, and what does it look like now? Christmas—and we will be fortunate if it is over then. I know that I have lost a big fortune by having to stay here, and hang me if I don't believe I can sue the City for damages."

All of the jurymen were in their seats during yesterday's session, anyhow, and they were rewarded by hearing some interesting evidence and witnessing at least one stirring incident. The latter was when Attorney Mitchell found himself outpointed at repartee by Mr. Delmas, lost his head and wanted to fight.

Attorney Reuben H. Lloyd, one of the Fair heirs' counselors, occupied the stand as a witness all day. His associate, Mr. Mitchell, applied the direct questions.

"Shortly after Mrs. Craven's departure for the East did you meet her attorney in fact, Stephen Roberts?" was the first query.

"I did," replied Mr. Lloyd.

"Did you have any conversation with him regarding Mrs. Craven's journey to recover the ink and pencil wills?"

"I did."

An effort to bring out this conversation at this time failed, under an objection, so a new line had to be taken up.

"Prior to Mrs. Craven's departure for the East did she say anything to you about Stephen Roberts?"

"Yes; she said she wanted some definite arrangement made by which the heirs were to do the right thing by her, and she said she would leave the matter in the hands of Mr. Roberts during her absence."

"And in pursuance of that did you have any dealings with Mr. Roberts?"

Mr. Lloyd said he had, and so had the other attorneys for the heirs—Messrs. Knight & Heggerty, Russell J. Wilson, Garber, Boalt & Bishop and W. S. Wood.

An objection was again raised to the bringing out of the conversations with Roberts and again sustained.

In order to get around the difficult corner, Mr. Mitchell asked the witness if the result of their conversations with Roberts was the drafting and execution of the contract by which Mrs. Craven was to receive $500,000 on the probating of the pencil will.

An affirmative reply was elicited, and with that Mr. Mitchell handed the witness the contract and asked him to identify it. This was also objected to, and again Mr. Mitchell found his way blockaded. The court ruled that the right of Mr. Lloyd and his associates to act for the heirs would have to be proved before the dealings could be properly shown.

Mr. Lloyd was then asked the direct question as to whether or not he had been authorized to act for the heirs. His reply was that he had communicated with Mrs. Oelrichs in regard to the proposed compromise, and that she had instructed him to go ahead and act for her.

Judge Curtis, the eminent New York attorney who is assisting in the defense of Mrs. Craven's rights, and is ever on the alert in that capacity, leaned over and had an earnest whispered conference with Mr. Delmas. At its conclusion the latter nodded affirmatively, and then announced that as the agency of Mr. Lloyd had now been satisfactorily proved he would offer no further objection to the Roberts conversations.

This seemed to carry Mr. Mitchell off his balance. In his anxiety to say something witty he got into trouble, lost his head, wanted to fight and had to finally apologize to the court.

"We could have saved a lot of time," was the way he started in, "if Mr. Delmas here had not put in so many captious objections. He's been acting as the schoolmaster here."

"And I have a most refractory pupil," rejoined Mr. Delmas, who thought Mitchell was merely trying to be facetious.

But Mitchell was nothing of the kind. He objected to being a "pupil," and in such language that caused Mr. Delmas to retort that counsel was insolent.

"That's the third or fourth time during this trial you've said I'm insolent," roared the attorney, shaking his finger at the placid-visaged Delmas, and growing white with rage. "Don't you say I'm insolent again, either in or out of this court."

Mitchell's associates were nudging him and pulling at his sleeves, in an effort to prevent an out and out explosion.

Mr. Delmas, who was not in the least ruffled by the occurrence, wanted to reply to Mitchell, but Judge Slack said he would attend to the fractious attorney himself. He proceeded to rebuke Mitchell, and the latter apologized profusely.

Mr. Lloyd then resumed his narrative. He said that during Mr. Craven's absence in the East, Mr. Roberts talked business frequently with the attorneys in behalf of the lady. He demanded $1,000,000 as the compromise figure, but the lawyers would not agree to so high a figure. It was finally agreed that $500,000 should be the amount.

When Mrs. Craven returned from the East she saw Mr. Lloyd, and, according to his story on the stand, told him about the loss of the ink will on the journey. But she had the pencil will. Subsequent to this the witness had a long talk with Mrs. Craven, during which she told him of her long acquaintance with Senator Fair, and of his complete confidence in her. He had, during the course of their friendship, written out several wills in her house. The terms of one of these wills were that the estate should be held in trust for his children, but Mrs. Craven talked him out of this. She persuaded him to write another that would bequeath his estate direct to the children. She convinced him that this would be the only fair thing to do.

Mr. Lloyd then proceeded to relate one of the humorous incidents that Mrs. Craven had imparted to him as having occurred between her and the Senator.

"Mrs. Craven told me that on one occasion the Senator wanted to marry her," said Mr. Lloyd. "'Oh, you don't mean that,' she said she replied. 'If you think I don't, just put on your shoes and come with me,' replied the Senator. Mrs. Craven said that, believing the Senator was joking. She did put on her shoes and accompanied him. He conducted her to a clergyman's residence, and leading the way up the stairs, rang the doorbell. Seeing this Mrs. Craven ran away. When the Senator returned to the Occidental Hotel, where they had left together, he was quite angry at her for her action. She said she did not believe he meant it, and he insisted that he did."

Mr. Lloyd told of the incident graphically and had the whole courtroom tittering.

The witness said that Mrs. Craven accounted to him for some of the erasures on the pencil will by saying that Senator Fair was somewhat imperfect in his spelling and she had to help him out frequently while he was writing the will. He would then erase the misspelled words and rewrite them.

Mrs. Craven had described how the Senator wrote the wills in her house upon the flyleaf of a typewritten play which belonged to Miss Margaret Craven. She afterward gave this play to Mr. Lloyd and the gentleman now produced it in court. There was a little scrap of paper clinging to the eyelet holding the pages together, which fitted into the tear in the pencil will exactly, thus showing that the will really was written in Mrs. Craven's house, just as she had said.

Mr. Lloyd identified the letter that Senator Fair wrote to Mrs. Craven after he had executed the pencil will. He said he was greatly surprised when he first saw it, because Mrs. Craven had not referred to it in any of her early conversations with him. He was equally surprised when he heard about the deeds, for Mrs. Craven had always led him to believe that if any deeds had been executed in her favor they would be found in the dead millionaire's estate.

This ended the direct examination of Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Delmas took him in hand for cross-examination.

Reference was made to the conversation between Mrs. Craven and the witness, during which the latter said he was surprised that the lady had a letter from Fair, written subsequent to the pencil will and referring to that document. Mr. Lloyd said he thought his law partner, Mr. Wood, heard some of the conversation.

The witness did not get any further with his evidence, owing to the arrival of the usual adjournment hour.
