NOTES OF THE DAY.

THE Cherokee Indian nation has established a national orphan asylum.

"READY-MADS" bridal costumes are appropriately advertised in a New Jersey paper.

To have a narrow, elegant foot, shave off the little toe and be fashionable.

BROADBRIMS and coal-scuttle bonnets have gone out of fashion among English Quakers.

A SQUIRREL, in a revolving cage, runs a sewing machine in the show window of a Saratoga shop.

ST. LOUIS LAWYERS are soon to appear in court in black gowns. They think such a costume will elevate their dignity and inspire the irreverent client with awe.

The race between the Biglin brothers, of New York, and Coulter and Cabot, of Pittsburg, has been arranged to take place on the Schuylkill. Distance, five miles; stakes, $2,000.

THERE was a high old time at the funeral of that Georgia man who bought his coffin some years ago and packed it with choice old brandy.

CALIFORNIA has appointed a "State tree-planter," whose business it is to be to plant trees wherever the growth of timber is possible in the State.

THE famous French spoliation claims that have been before Congress for a half century, are made by 956 claimants who want about $5,000,000.

M'LLE. SASSI, of the Crook, is doing the neatest thing on the stage yet heard of. To a slimy, creepy tune, she slides up to an urn of flowers and drags therefrom a hideous, crested snake. She shakes the torpid wretch until he slowly unfolds himself, runs his forky tongue out, and wags his scaly tail in long-meter fashion. Then Sassi dances and winds the clammy worm about her neck, and if there's a man in the audience wants to make her acquaintance after that exhibition, it's some man that owns an anaconda and wants to have it educated. I'm happy to add that Saturday the snake bit her hand, and it was red and inflamed at night. Though, as the serpent's fangs have been unfortunately drawn, it is not likely to prove dangerous.—St. Louis Republican New York Letter.
