THE HUSTON SCANDAL.

Ladies Willing to Testify—His Mode of Attack.

[From the Baltimore American.]

The developments we have published relative to the crimes and infamous conduct of the Rev. Dr. Huston have so startled the journals of distant cities that many of them seem disposed to think that there must have been exaggeration and misrepresentation. When we assure them that during the week that has elapsed since our first exposure we have been unable to find the slightest testimony going to discredit those statements, they will begin to comprehend something of the real character of the man. Instead of modifying our denunciation or withdrawing any of the charges, the information received since warrants us in the conviction that half has not yet been told. From every quarter comes the most unimpeachable testimony as to his infamous and systematic course, those who attempted to complain against him having been frowned down and silenced by those who persisted that the man could do no wrong. Thus it was that the attempt was being made to discredit the evidence of his unfortunate victims, which might have been accomplished had not the press of the city come to their rescue.

MANY LADIES WILLING TO TESTIFY.

Every day develops something that throws new light upon his erratic performances. Some newspapers, in referring to the charges that have driven him in disgrace from Baltimore, speak of him as a man against whom "there was before no breath of suspicion." Now the truth is, that his lascivious conduct has been a matter of comment ever since he has been in Baltimore. Four years ago his sentimental devotion to a prostitute and care for her comfort caused the withdrawal of one lady from his church and put two others on their guard. How many of the ladies of his congregation he has grossly insulted will never be known; but since his flight some of them have been comparing experiences, and blushingly they confess that he approached them with the same flattering words, and tried to confuse struggling virtue by the same insidious arts. Two years ago parents were cautioned not to allow their children to go to his study, and six months afterwards the revelations made by one of the victims excited a commotion which was in some inexplicable way suppressed.

HIS MODE OF ATTACK.

It is hoped that no bad man will profit by a knowledge of the "taking ways" which Dr. Huston sometimes found successful. He seems to have had a systematic method of approach, a sort of sapper and miner strategy, by which he began the attack a long way off, and came very close before he unmasked his real design. For instance, some fifteen months ago a Christian lady called to see him with regard to a charitable enterprise that was then contemplated for the benefit of the poor of the church. She was fine-looking, and she became more interested in her than in the charity which she represented. He began by a series of most extravagant compliments to the lady's beauty, and told her that such was the influence it had on him that if he happened to meet her eyes when he was preaching he felt embarrassed. The lady was indignant, and gave him to understand that his flattery was distasteful. The amorous doctor then took a "new departure." He told the lady that one of the ministers of the church, a married man, was deeply in love with her, and that he (the pastor) had much difficulty in restraining him from declaring his passion. This sally had no effect whatever, and the fair visitor refused to ask the name of the enamored trustee.

PHILOSOPHY AND PHRENOLOGY.

Neither his flattery nor his cunning being effective, the preacher fell back on his philosophy. He told the lady that he was a philosopher, a phrenologist, and a doctor; that he understood all about the secret springs of human action and human impulse; that he was familiar with the philosophy of love, and knew the psychological and physical conditions in which it had its origin; that there was no moral quality in the passion, and that even its supreme acts were not sinful, when the natural affinities were in perfect accord.

The lady now saw the fearful drift of his studied argument, and refused to listen to him any longer. She charged him with violating the commandments and disbelieving the Word of God. He immediately comprehended her meaning, and forthwith began to deliver an exegetical treatise on the seventh commandment, to which he gave an interpretation which the lady had never heard before, and which she instinctively knew was false. She withdrew from his presence, and as she went out of the door he entreated her to take no harm from what he had told her.

It is needless to say that this woman's confidence in her pastor was gone forever. She thought at the time that he was drunk.

We know the lady whose experience we have given above, and from her position in society and in the church we do not think that Dr. Huston or his friends would care to raise an issue as to her veracity.

As Elopement.

A CLASS-LEADER OF HUSTON'S CHURCH ELOPES WITH A SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER.

[From the Baltimore Journal.]

John W. Selby, a prominent commission merchant, and a member and class-leader of Trinity M. E. Church South, has long been enamored of a Miss Ada Turner, a Sabbath-school teacher in the same church. The shepherd of this house of worship having proven faithless and wicked, some of the flock have taken into their heads to stray likewise from the fold.

The lady in question, Miss Ada Turner, is also a principal of a primary school, and although quite intelligent, is far from being handsome. However, other women than those who are considered pretty possess a strange infatuation over the other sex. Such was the case with Selby. There was something about Miss Turner unusually attractive to his eyes and heart, and so great was the fascination it was a matter to him of impossibility to suppress it.

At last he whispered into the ear of his inamorata the passion that burned within him, and of course told her that his existence would be miserable without having her as a worldly companion ever by his side. Before the elopement, however, their love was exchanged in a manner not recognized either by the law of God or man. The flight of the spiritual adviser, Huston, no doubt brought them to reflect upon their criminal intimacy, and as the lady was in a very delicate condition, the parties, no doubt somewhat alarmed at the present public sentiment against such illicit intercourse, fled from the city, and the man Selby from an interesting and highly esteemed family. What are Christian worshipers in the Church, the faithful and devoted workers in the vineyard of the Lord, to think of this disgraceful affair so soon after the villainy of Huston?

This man (Selby) was a member of the firm of a commission house in this city, which ranks among the most substantial and best. Its credit stands high, and the gentlemen comprising the firm move in the most refined and polished circles of society. In the church, John W. Selby was looked upon as a leading and highly efficient member, and, being so prominent, his attentions to Miss Ada Turner were frequently observed and commented upon.

SELBY EXPLAINS.

To those who knew that Mr. Selby was a man of family, and who took upon themselves the duty to approach him upon the subject of his rather devoted attentions to Miss Turner, he explained by telling them that the young lady was a poor public school teacher, that she barely supported herself in that avocation, and being a Sabbath-school teacher in Trinity church, he had often observed her, and that it was the sympathetic interest he took in her behalf that looked to the members of the congregation like attentions.

THE APOSTACY OF A CHRISTIAN.

This sympathy, it it had been true, would have appeared to any one as a noble quality in the breast of a Christian class-leader and member of society. But it was only feigned, as subsequent developments have proven, and his sympathy ripened, as he had all along intended, into illicit love. Instead of assisting the poor and defenceless female, he has robbed her of her virtue, and where perhaps before, although moving in an humble sphere of life, she was nevertheless happy; now instead, her future days are blighted, and the disgrace involved upon her by the insidious guile of her paramour all the waters of the ocean can never efface. The man has proven recreant to his trust, and this woman has fallen as his victim.

THE SADDEST PART OF ALL.

is the poignancy of grief and desolation that Selby has wrought in the much-esteemed family that he has left behind him. In a letter written to his wife he tells her of the infatuating influence that the young lady swayed over him, and inclosed in which was a check for $900.

He closes his letter with a tender farewell forever, and has fled from a home where there was everything to make life cheerful, including a beautiful and accomplished daughter just ripening into womanhood.

Besides this, the respect and influence that he commanded among his commercial associates has been ruthlessly assailed and considered as naught to the mere mockeries of an unnatural gratification. We cannot help our feeling much regret for the parties in the great sacrifice that they have made, and at the same time think that it is a crime that no one can reflect upon without giving vent to the warmest indignation.

AMERICAN copper cents circulate at three times their home value in Japan.

LONDON, with a population of 3,251,000, has 139,849 paupers, or about one pauper in every twenty-six of the inhabitants.

THE monthly pay roll of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railway, it is said, calls for between $400,000 and $500,000.

THE daughter of the mayor of one of the largest western cities was recently arrested in the streets for drunkenness, and her indignant father had the policeman who performed the duty discharged.
