Business Hours at the Executive Mansion.

Until the 4th of March the President will denote the forenoon, from 9:30 to 12 o'clock, to Senators and Members. The general reception of visitors in the afternoon, from 12 to 2, will be discontinued, and only those who have important business will be allowed interviews.

THE END OF THE CREDIT MOBILIER.

The journals that have been howling for the blood of the members of Congress connected with the credit mobilier company will, of course, denounce the action of the House yesterday. We shall be told that the Republican majority in refusing to sustain the report of the Poland committee and expel Mr. Ames and Mr. Brooks has dug its political grave, and that we shall hear of it no more forever. Angry editors will paint its rottenness and corruption in glowing colors, and indignant stump speakers will scream more loudly than ever for reform. All this is to be expected. The vials of wrath will be poured out on Gen. Butler, to whom will be attributed the defeat of what will be termed the righteous judgment of the investigating committee. Journals like the New York World, which aided and abetted the villainy of the Tammany ring, will work themselves with a frenzy of indignation and proclaim the death of the republic. But the splendid rhetoric to which we shall be treated during the next month will all pass away, and in its place will come the sober, second thought and judgment of the people.

There are one or two points in the whole case to which we desire to call attention. First of all, it must be remembered that the investigation which has just been brought to a close was begun upon the motion of the leader of the Republican party in the House, so far as any man can be called a leader. It was not forced upon the party by the opposition; it was the act of the party itself. During the late canvass grave charges of corruption were made against half a dozen of the leading men in the Republican party; they were accused of having been bribed and bought; of having made a large amounts of money in a corrupt way; of having been unfaithful to their trust, and violated the confidence reposed in them. These charges were made, and received the widest circulation long before the election took place; the people had ample time to consider and pass upon them, and what was the result? Mr. Blaine was re-elected in Maine; Mr. Wilson ran even with General Grant; General Garfield and Mr. Kelley, Mr. Scofield and Mr. Dawes were all re-elected by majorities greater than they ever before obtained. The House of Representatives yesterday only set its seal upon the verdict which the people had already rendered.

There is another point connected with this whole business which the people will not fail to note. In all our political history no party ever subjected itself to so close and rigid a scrutiny as that which has just closed. If the Democratic party had been in power, and if charges similar to those preferred against the gentlemen who have been dragged through the gutters of defamation and slander during the last three months, had been preferred against its leaders, would it ever have authorized a committee, armed with the supreme power of Congress, to institute an investigation? The case is, to be sure, hypothetical, but the probabilities are all against such a course upon its part. When the Tammany frauds were disclosed in New York, not a Democrat in the country raised his hand to strike the accused swindlers until compelled to do so by the just indignation of the people. When Senator-elect Bogy, of Missouri, was accused of having obtained his seat by the corrupt use of money, a few weeks ago, the Democratic majority in the Legislature of that State appointed a committee, but the intention from the very beginning was to conceal, rather than to find out, the truth. The proceedings before it were so much of a mockery and a sham that the organ of the Democratic party in Missouri denounced the committee and demanded "that the committee go to work in earnest." In addition to that, there is the report of the minority of the committee, solemnly asserting that the inquiry was stifled, and that the majority absolutely refused to send for witnesses who would conclusively prove the guilt of the newly-elected Senator. That is the Democratic teaching, theory and practice from Andrew Jackson's day down to the present.

As we said, we have no doubt that the people will indorse the action of the House, not only on the mere technical and constitutional grounds upon which the resolutions of expulsion were rejected, but upon the broad and general ground that no crime was committed in the premises.

THE INAUGURATION.

Unquestionably the approaching inauguration of General Grant will exceed, both in the grandeur of its display and the number of its visitors, any of its predecessors, while in political significance it will fall below none that have taken place since that one which placed the Father of his Country in its chair of state. Then our Government was an experiment, made by a few oppressed colonists who, weak but hopeful, poor but full of faith, had come out of a long and dreadful struggle with a proud and powerful kingdom, wresting from it the great independence which millions now enjoy. But "we, the people," were under the guidance of great and good men in those dark days; men whom the urgent necessities of the times produced as quickly as they were required. To the wisdom of Washington, the statecraft of Jefferson, the brilliancy of Alexander Hamilton, and the philosophy of the Pennsylvania printer much of our present great prosperity is directly attributable. The first days of the republic were fraught with peril, for a political mistake, however slight it at first appeared to be, might before many years prove very disastrous to the young Government. There was but one legacy which gave us trouble, but that trouble—that implacableness we should now call it—was overcome by the great leader, who for another term is honored by the party, the wishes of which, both on the battle and on the political field, he has served so faithfully.

At another and more appropriate time we may speak of the political importance attaching to the coming inauguration, for we have now to do with the preparations that have so extensively been made under the direction of the general committee. Some of the gentlemen composing the committee have been working most energetically, for, as is always the case, the hard drudgery of arrangements has not been equally divided. Those who assumed the responsibility, to the great relief of the figure heads with high-sounding names and titles, are men of energy and skill; and whatever success in the way of display we may witness on the 4th of March will in a great measure be due to their labors.

The procession, made up of the best-drilled military organizations in the United States and the most celebrated political clubs, will be a very grand display. The greatest desire to see the West Point and Annapolis cadets, as well as the crack companies from New York and elsewhere, is generally expressed, and we feel sure that the high expectations that have been raised regarding their appearance as soldiers will not be disappointed when the day arrives. It is admitted on all sides that the ball will totally eclipse in grandeur and numbers any previous effort of the kind. Certainly, the preparations for the affair are most complete, and it now rests with those who purpose to attend it to increase the brilliancy which is sure to reign. Several of the State associations, (to which, by the way, great credit is due for the interest they have manifested and the systematic manner in which they have afforded co-operative aid,) propose to give grand balls on the evening of the 4th.

From present appearances we are inclined to regard "inauguration day" as a misnomer. It should be "inauguration week," for it seems that, with balls, parties, military displays and social receptions, the attractions will cover all of the coming week. On the evening of the 5th the proposed masquerade will come off in the ball building, and as great an attendance as that which will favor its more exclusive companion is generally bespoken for it. Then, during the week comes a long line of such affairs under various auspices, many of which are only now taking shape. The week will be one of the greatest gaiety—a fitting close to our unprecedented season of fashion and a most suitable inauguration of an Administration which, by its past policy, gives the best assurance of its coming success.

THE FARRAGUT STATUE.

A few days ago we printed an article in regard to the models for the Farragut statue now on exhibition in the Capitol, in which we said that, with the exception of possibly one, (which is not Vinnie Ream's,) no one of them was worthy of the subject or fit to be accepted. We had not at the time seen the model of Professor Stone, which is at the navy yard, nor have we had the opportunity since, but if the opinion of gentlemen who are fully competent to form an opinion on the subject be worth anything, his is infinitely superior to anything on exhibition, which is not saying much, but it is in every sense a truly great work. During the last few days we have received numerous communications from naval officers who knew the dead admiral and revere his memory; all of them bestowing the most unqualified praise upon Mr. Stone's work. We have room for only one, which will be found in another column.

While upon the subject we desire to say a few words personal to Mr. Stone. He was the first who suggested the idea of a statue of Farragut. He began to make preparations to execute it as far back as 1863. Congress in the original resolution directed that the order be given to him. But in the meantime active and energetic lobbyists, who have mistaken their vocation as artists, stepped in and had another resolution passed throwing the work open to competition. Hence the mass of rubbish in the Capitol at the present time. Mr. Stone has from the very beginning declined to enter into a contest or to resort to the petty and unprofessional tricks of those who have constituted themselves his rivals. He has not used any political influence or taken pains to advertise his work through the columns of the newspaper press. He has from first to last acted the part of a true artist and a gentleman. We say this for him without any solicitation on his part or the part of any one of his friends, but solely because we know that the facts are what we have stated them to be.

THE DANGER OF AN EXTRA SESSION.

The assertions made by General Butler and Mr. Sargent in the House last night were not intended merely to frighten the House into more rapid disposition of the credit mobilier business, but was prompted by a firm belief, in view of the fact that three days have already been lost in the House and that more may be lost, that a necessity for an extra session already exists. Senator Thurman and other leading Democrats, who take an unimpassioned if not an unpartisan view of the case, are of the same opinion. It is now proposed that if this necessity becomes more apparent on Monday, a law shall be passed under a suspension of the rules convening the Forty-third Congress within two or three weeks after the inauguration. This will relieve the President of all responsibility, and insure the assembling of the new Congress without delay, all the members to it having been elected except those from the States of New Hampshire and Connecticut.

OUR READERS should be very careful in forming an opinion of the governmental muddle in Louisiana by the dispatches from that State which are printed just now. We do not wish to be understood as impugning the journalistic characters of the press agents in that section, but just at this time the greatest endeavors are being made by the agents of the Warmoth faction to favorably impress Congress. First comes a dispatch saying that everything is chaos, business is suspended, &c.; then comes another announcing that the Mardi Gras (notwithstanding this state of affairs) was never so celebrated; then still another giving the alarming news that Gov. Warmoth's McEnery is about to organize a militia force to drive out the Kellogg government, and fight the United States unless Congress yields to his demands. To make use of a slang phrase, the last is entirely "too thin."

THE LOGIC of the Times on the credit mobilier is tersely stated by itself as follows: "In order to save a few Republicans, is it worth while to run the risk of ruining the Republican party?" If the Republican party can be ruined by dealing out equal and exact justice to all men, the sooner it is ruined the better. The policy the Times would have the party pursue only demonstrates its utter inability to lead the party. Evidently, it is policy, not principle, with the journal that assumes to hold the place of the old Tribune in the Republican party.

MOST OF OUR READERS will remember that the venemous warfare upon Senator Pomeroy was begun by the publication in a disreputable journal of a fac simile of a letter purported to have been written by Mr. Pomeroy to Mr. Ross, of Kansas. We have been shown documentary evidence of the best character which proves that the letter in question was never written by Mr. Pomeroy, and is nothing more or less than a forgery.

IT IS SOME COMFORT after all to know that even the Times itself has a faint idea that its course upon the credit mobilier is disgraceful. It says: "This," referring to its own clamor, "may seem a low view of the requirements of the hour." It is not only "low" but unrepublican and un-American.

THE World yesterday "hoped that the Democratic Congressmen" would do their duty in the credit mobilier business. A large number of them have; but the World will perceive that their and its ideas of "duty" differ somewhat.

THE Times yesterday ventured upon a prediction "that General Butler's argument would make no impression." As a prophet the Times editor is evidently not to be depended upon.

The Crime of Senator Pomeroy's Assailants.

[By the Hon. Caleb Cushing.]

Now, there are some crimes which a gentleman may commit, such as treason, or even occasionally assassinations of vendetta or of honor; other crimes belong to natures so mean as to be beneath anger, such as common theft; but there is another class of crimes of vulgar, low, brutish order, such as forgery, cheating and rape, which disgust and repel. Such is the crime which these conspirators deliberately agreed on commit by the hand of Yorke, a crime one degree baser than that of which Rohrabacher was convicted; for burglary has an element of physical courage in it which does not appertain to this conspiracy to swindle a Senator of the United States. And these conspirators are friends of education, forsooth; they must needs season their criminality with cant on that subject; they were to cheat in order to get money for the school fund. When Vespasian established to Titus the new coin obtained from the tax on closes he said, "My son, non olet." What sort of smell would belong to a school fund augmented by money which Mr. Yorke should have obtained from Mr. Pomeroy by conspiracy, falsehood and fraud?

PERSONAL.

—Louis Jennings, editor of the New York Times, is going to Europe.

—Wm. B. Reed, late of Philadelphia, is writing editorials on the New York World.

—Mme. Marie Sass has obtained a splendid success in "L'Africaine," at Madrid. The prima donna received from the queen a magnificent bracelet.

—Alexander Dumas and George Sand have jointly written a tragedy entitled "Bruno," which Victor Hugo says is superior to any tragedy ever written in modern times.

—A monument is to be erected to Byron at Missolonghi—when the funds are collected. A committee has been formed for that purpose. The Greek Church even is said to have left its aid.

—Governor Sprague's house at Narragansett, near Newport, has more than sixty apartments, and is provided with a telegraph wire leading to New York, or, one night say as well, to London, Constantinople, San Francisco and Canton.

—As a member of Congress Oakes Ames may be subject to censure, but those who allow themselves to call in question the Ames enterprise and liberality at North Easton, will be quickly contradicted by the citizens of that town.—Boston Transcript.

—George Augustus Sala, in a paper in the last number of the Belgravia, repeats the story of Ben Jonson's rejection of Charles the First's present of thirty pounds. "He sends me thirty pounds," growled the old poet, "because I live in an alley. Go back, and tell him his soul lives in an alley."
