THE NEW MASSACHUSETTS SENATOR.

The election of Mr. Boutwell to succeed Vice President Wilson, as Senator from Massachusetts, will be received with satisfaction by Republicans everywhere. The vote for Mr. Dawes was large and must be exceedingly flattering to that gentleman. It is no discredit to Mr. Dawes that he was beaten by a man who stands as high not only in his own State but in the country as Mr. Boutwell, and in addition to that he has the satisfaction of knowing that no one else in Massachusetts would have done it. The contest which has just closed was in many respects a most remarkable one. For nearly twelve months it has been the principal topic of discussion in the Old Bay State, and indeed incidentally throughout the United States. The eminence of the gentlemen in one way or another connected with it invested it with a national importance. First of all there was Mr. Wilson, the candidate for the Vice Presidency; then Mr. Boutwell, the Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. Dawes, the leader of the House, with General Butler in the background, managing the mysterious works of the political machine, and, popular report said, avenging old defeats and planning fresh victories.

But, all these considerations apart, Massachusetts has made an excellent selection in choosing Mr. Boutwell. It is not only fortunate for her, but for the Republican party, that he is in the Senate. His rare ability and great experience will make him an invaluable member of that body, and be of advantage to the whole country.

WHO FOLLOWS HIS EXAMPLE?

NEW YORK, March 11, 1873.

Hon. George S. Boutwell, Secretary of the United States Treasury:

DEAR SIR: I have this day instructed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to pay into the Treasury of the United States the amount of my back pay as a member of the Forty-second Congress. Having voted against the bill for the increase of pay, chiefly in consequence of this particular feature, I would not feel justified in accepting money the granting of which I opposed with my vote.

I will further say that I was undecided whether to distribute the amount among the charities of my Congressional district or turn it over to the Treasury of the United States; but, on consideration, I deem the course I have taken the proper one under the circumstances.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

WM. R. ROBERTS,

Fifth Congressional District.

The above letter explains both itself and the character of its writer. Colonel Roberts voted against the bill giving the increase of pay, and, with his accustomed consistency, cannot now accept of its benefits. It would be well for New York, and for the Democratic party generally, if more gentlemen of the stripe of Colonel Roberts were its representatives in the national councils; and, indeed, the Republican party would not be hurt by some such consistency in its Congressional representatives. Mr. Hazleton, of Wisconsin, has devoted his extra pay to the benefit of charitable purposes, and Judge Hoar, of Massachusetts, has turned over the amount received by him to the Worcester County Free Institute of Industrial Science, for the benefit of pupils from his district. These dispositions are much better than retaining it, but to our mind the more honorable and praiseworthy course in a member who opposed the bill is the one adopted by Mr. Roberts, of New York.

WASHINGTON CITY.

The permanent prosperity of the District is not and cannot be assured by large appropriations or expenditures on avenues, public edifices, or palatial mansions. Our city is at present too much like our attractive watering places, with only a short season of four months in the year during which visitors assemble to overcrowd our hotels and boarding-houses, and then disperse again. Yet within a few miles of us we find a thriving manufacturing city, Baltimore, possessing altogether inferior natural advantages to those we have, lively with the hum of machinery, the hammer of the artisan, the splashing of steamboat paddles, the snorting and clanger of locomotives and cars, and crowned with the smoke of furnaces and rolling-mills, all evidences of competence, comfort, increasing wealth and prosperity. Washington is remarkably situated, being at the head of navigation and foot of water power on one of the finest rivers on the continent, surrounded by cheap, rich, fertile though unoccupied agricultural lands. Half way between the North and the South, it may draw supplies of raw material from either section by cheap or rapid modes of communication, and distribute manufactured articles either way with the same facilities, being the terminus of an important canal, leading to coal, ore and timber supplies also. Here the artisan may, therefore, find cheap houses and living, and, with capital, profitable employment.

To inaugurate manufacturing in a city so favorably situated, even on the largest scale, is not difficult. It is not cause for discouragement that the labor, skill and capital are not already here. The initiatory steps only have to be taken by a few of our most energetic and enterprising citizens on a comprehensive plan, in which some public improvements to be hereafter referred to must be included. We must organize manufacturing companies on a liberal estimate, and subscribe to their capital as far as our means will extend, and rely on foreign subscriptions for the remainder. We must encourage skillful, ingenious and industrious mechanics to make Washington their homes, and last, but not least, we must encourage European farmers and market gardeners to occupy the waste lands now lying unoccupied and uncultivated in every direction around the city. It is well known, for instance, that the soil of these lands produces the finest celery in the world, and therefore the world should be supplied with celery from the District of Columbia. A large part of all the products of the farm and garden now consumed in our city comes at present from other sections. Washington is equally well or better situated than Baltimore for the oyster trade. This being true, a committee of zealous citizens of our city could easily induce men skillful in the business to locate here by the tender of special privilege or advantages. Only concert of action is necessary to bring about the most desirable results. And ship-yards, rolling mills, foundries, machine shops, flour mills, forges, carriage factories, agricultural implement factories, &c., could also be encouraged to locate here by the same means, if no better could be devised. As to the public improvements which may be deemed necessary, the improvement of our river front is first in importance. This measure has already had attention from our citizens, United States engineers and Congress. The channel of the Potomac should also be made deep enough for the largest ships, if it be not so already. Nature, acting by the current of the water, directed aright by "wing dams," may be made to perform the improvement at small expense if it be necessary. The same agency may possibly be employed for dredging out the channel opposite our river front.

Next, it may be advisable to increase the capacity of the Washington aqueduct, so that water-power may be supplied through mains and pipes to every building in which power is required throughout the city. By this means printing presses, sewing machines, turning-lathes, saws, planing machines, drills, coffee and other mills and all light machinery could be driven wherever necessary; the streets kept clean, in summer cool, copious fountains supplied in every street, and the sewers could be washed out with a voluminous supply of waste water used for these various purposes throughout the city. Lastly, a ship canal from Washington to Annapolis is a public work of national importance, which, if completed, would add vastly to the resources of Washington.

We anticipate great results to flow from the general desire we hear daily expressed by our citizens to encourage manufacturing in this favored locality. Let us add this element of prosperity to the liberal expenditures of our Board of Public Works and Washington will indeed grow to be the metropolis and capital of the continent.

THE SALARY QUESTION.

The increase by the late Congress of the salaries of the President, members of the Cabinet, justices of the Supreme Court, members of Congress, &c., is just now the subject of numerous articles in the newspaper press. Nearly all the so-called independent and the majority of the Democratic journals are bitter in their attacks upon the officers who will receive the increased compensation, and especially bitter upon the members of Congress who voted for it. The New York World, however, more discriminating and judicial than its party cotemporaries, draws a distinction between the classes who are thus benefited, and while severely condemning members of Congress for voting money into their own pockets, says in regard to the President and the judges:

"Compared with the judicial and executive officers of other countries ours are underpaid. The salary of the President, though increased, will not permit him to lay up an amount worth as much as an English prime minister's pension. Yet with some frugality of expenditure in the White House a poor man entering the Presidency might now retire from it able to conform to our unwritten law that ex-Presidents shall not engage in the bread-and-butter fight. As to the judges of the Supreme Court, the man with a family to support who goes upon the bench even now can make little or no provision against disaster, and must possess a fixed income apart from his salary if he would not see his daughters suffering as the daughters of the late Chief Justice Taney have suffered.

"Extravagant as the rate of our national expenditure is, heavy as is the burden of our annual retrenchment, needful as are economies in every department of the Government, we cannot and ground to sophism severely the increase of the salaries of President, Vice President and Speaker. It is no popular a thing just now to utter that condemnation that journals like the Times, which provoked public indignation by their persistent whitewashing of the venal credit mobilier men, now seek to appease that indignation by attributing no more venal wrong-doing, but we must deal fairly with our readers, and, whatever might be the political advantage of their indignation we cannot conscientiously attempt to arouse it in the case of the increase of the salaries of the executive officers we have named; while as for the increased salaries of the judges, they are not, in our opinion, a dollar too high, and we could even wish the salaries of the circuit and district judges had been doubled.

"For increasing the salaries of Congressmen we should not have voted. Five thousand dollars is a larger amount than a majority of Congressmen annually earn at home, and by service as Representatives they are precluded not, but assisted rather, to increase honestly their incomes. If their expenses during the session are larger in Washington than at home, several months in the year are left them in which they may be earning money. As for the members whose income is larger than their pay as Representatives, their case need not be considered. We cannot afford to pay any of our Congressmen as much as they would be willing to expend while in office. So just the extravagance of an increase of Congressional salaries we are obliged to condemn, though not in language as unmeasured as that employed by some of our Democratic cotemporaries, nor so violent as that used by our Republican neighbors with reputations to be made or repaired."

IN THE ARRANGEMENT of committees by the Senate caucus, we are gratified to see, without being invidious, that Senator Boreman, of West Virginia, has been assigned as chairman of the Committee on Territories. This is a well-merited compliment to Senator Boreman, whose service in the Senate of the United States has been distinguished at all times by a conscientious discharge of his duty. While he may be regarded as a strict party man, yet his speeches and his votes on all the leading measures before that body have ever been characterized by liberality and a patriotism embracing every part of the country. His speeches evince research and power, and show him to be a gentleman of careful, disciplined thought and of well-balanced mind. The country will be gratified by his selection to preside over this important committee.

THE DISPATCHES from New Hampshire would seem to indicate that the Democracy have succeeded in re-electing their three Congressmen, and that the choice of Governor will devolve upon the Legislature, which is Republican.

HON. E. J. GOLLADAY, of the Fifth Tennessee district, will soon leave for his home. Although not re-elected to the Forty-third Congress he is one of the most popular, efficient, as well as gallant, Representatives from that state. His course while a member has been marked by a spirit of liberality and fairness, and as his district is decidedly Democratic, if one of that party is to come from it, we hope to see him in the Forty-fourth Congress.

"THE GRAPHIC," the new illustrated daily of New York, in its issue of Tuesday presents a very amusing cartoon, representing Gen. A. J. Meyer as "Old Probabilities," carrying in his right hand a watering pot, in which a barometer is stuck, and in his left a carpet-bag, out of which peeps the god of day. The facial likeness is excellent, and the caricature as a whole is very fine.
