THE Herald says: "Mr. O'Kelley cannot be in a number of places at once." This is a grave injustice to O'Kelley. We are certain that in the bright lexicon of that youth there is no such word as "impossible."

MR. SCHURZ complains of the "lobby influences surrounding the Capitol." The principal lobbyists around the Capitol are Liberal Republicans. The Missouri Senator should be more kind to his friends.

THE ORDER of the vice president of the Board of Public Works, notifying contractors that they must finish up their work before the 1st of May, will be commended by our citizens without distinction of party.

THE Boston Transcript thinks that "the Republican party cannot succeed in close States like New Hampshire if Gen. Butler is to be its leader in Congress." But it has succeeded in New Hampshire. The Transcript had better confine itself to its "tea and toast," and not venture upon political predictions.

IN THE SENATE YESTERDAY Mr. Schurz gave it as his opinion that Mr. Caldwell would never have been elected but for the use of money. We think that if the roll of the Senate were called it would be found that the same remark might be made of a good many other gentlemen in that body.

THE Chicago Post quotes an extract from a recent article in the REPUBLICAN on the subject of the appropriations made by the last Congress, and says: "Washington rejoices exceedingly at the Congressional grant of some [illegible] million dollars for street improvements. Yes, our citizens [illegible] The property holders [illegible] Washington rather than to the people, do not mourn over large appropriations from Congress, and will obtain still larger in the future, because the American people are determined that the capital shall not be inferior to that of any country in the world.

MASSACHUSETTS ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The most vehement opponent of the woman-suffrage movement must concede that its leaders, working with a hearty good-will, exhibit a long-suffering at once surprising and commendable. This proves one thing: that while personal and social jealousies among them may deter the advance of the cause they advocate, their all is linked with the welfare of the movement. What most champions would unquestionably regard as a set-back to their cause these people pass by as something which they long have anticipated. Nothing seems to discourage them, while anything favorable encourages them. Therefore the vote given by the Massachusetts Legislature a few days ago—eighty-three yeas to one hundred nays—though falling far below that balloted the year before, will only be a drop of cold water on their ardor. It seems that a larger votein their favor could have been polled had not the members discovered how reluctant their neighbors were to pay any heed to the resolution, so that there seemed to arise a general determination to disregard it altogether. Women are at the bottom of the affair, and, however frail in other matters they may be, or however impracticable their present hobby is, they will continue, we rather regret to say, to exhibit the same strength of purpose and tenacity of grip that have characterized the movement from its inception. It is, however, rather hard that the cause should receive such cold comfort in the house of its friends, as Massachusetts is generally supposed to be.

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

Mention has already been made in our telegraphic news of the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Pennsylvania railroad in Philadelphia a few days ago. The report of the operations of the road then submitted is a highly suggestive document, upon which column upon column might be written, leaving still a fruitful and almost inexhaustible mine. With the progress and the business of the Pennsylvania road as a mere corporation, as a number of gentlemen associated together to make money in the carrying of freight and passengers, the public is not to a large extent interested; but the growth of the road is important inasmuch as it goes to show the growth of one of the greatest States in the Union, and the growth of the country itself. It is a sort of commercial barometer by which we can estimate the measure of our national advancement and prosperity.

The figures which the managers of the road presented to its stockholders are simply marvelous. Last year its capital stock amounted to seventy-five millions of dollars, while its funded debt amounted to the same sum. During 1871 it carried freight to the amount of six and a half million tons, upon which the charges were over fourteen millions of dollars. It transported four million seven hundred thousand passengers, who paid nearly four millions of dollars. Its total receipts were almost nineteen million dollars. During 1872 the earnings of the road and its branches, between Philadelphia and Pittsburg, were in round numbers twenty-two million dollars, the expenses fourteen and the net earnings over eight millions of dollars. But this is not the entire amount of income realized by the management of the Pennsylvania railroad. Including all the lines operated by the company, we find the total receipts to be nearly thirty-seven millions of dollars, the expenses twenty-five and the net profits eleven and a quarter millions of dollars. In addition to all this, it permeates through twenty States of the Union, controlling numerous other lines, about whose business and operations the report is entirely silent.

It is not unlikely that the road [illegible] simply to control travel with the natural development that is certain to come to it with the growth of the country, it would, in a very few years, attain an expansion that can hardly be comprehended by the ordinary understanding. But the ambition of the road is as boundless as the continent which it has made the basis of its operations, and it has already planned a number of stupendous enterprises which, if successful, will carry it to still greater heights of power, influence and, let us hope, usefulness. By a new law it is authorized to increase its capital stock to $150,000,000; to issue mortgage bonds to the amount of $35,000,000; five millions of dollars to be expended in wharfage improvements at Jersey City; double tracks are now being laid to Pittsburg, and a new "low grade line" for freight is to be built across the Alleghany mountains. The policy of the road—the absorption of existing lines wherever greater facilities of communication can be obtained—is, we suppose, to be steadily pursued in the future, as in the past, so that with its almost limitless resources, comprehensive grasp of the wants and necessities of the country, and a thorough consciousness of its own opportunities, the series and bounds of this giant corporation are in all probability destined to be limited only by the confines of the republic itself. As we have said, this road, as indeed all the great trunk lines, is a gauge of the prosperity of the country. Its business doubles because the business of the whole country increases in the same ratio. Its passenger receipts are doubled because our population is increasing in almost the same proportion. We are gratified at the favorable exhibit made by the company for the reason that it is the best evidence that could be offered of our increase in all that goes to make a nation great and powerful.

"PAID ADVOCATES."

It is a common thing for persons of little sense to stigmatize those who earnestly advocate any public measure, either in Congress or in any State Legislature, as "paid advocates." A man who has not the capacity to earn his living outside of public life may sneer at his more successful and more able neighbor as a "paid advocate" of the cause he supports. Suppose this principle of argument to be carried to the extreme limit. Certain members of Congress have often been accused of speaking in favor of measures in which they were supposed to be incidentally or actually interested, and then a slur is cast at them as being "paid advocates." Sometimes an excitement is raised because Gen. Butler is employed in this, that or the other matter. Why should not his talents and knowledge of law and public affairs be made available? It is no reproach to such gentlemen that they are paid for their work; it is, on the contrary, a compliment to their abilities and usefulness that their services are required. William H. Seward and Reverdy Johnson were regularly retained by business men of all occupations, while at the same time they were acting in public life.

We think this cry of "paid advocate" is a very mean whine. It is not raised by such men as Garrison, Phillips and Fred. Douglass, who have for years delivered lectures for a compensation on the slavery question, nor by other men equally distinguished who have instructed the people, by their voices and examples, on other great moral questions. The laborer is always worthy of his hire. Few of the great men in history would have been celebrated had there not been a prospect ahead of their personal gain. The stimulus of ambition has generally more of a material than a metaphysical character. Since wealth has come to be a power in the world every one naturally desires to obtain his share of the world's goods, and if a man's opportunities and knowledge of business have tended to fit him particularly for any specialty it should not be cast up to him in the way of reproach that he has been able to utilize his talents. On the contrary, he should be congratulated that he has been properly appreciated.

A Most Remarkable Man.

[From the Courier Journal.]

Horace Greeley: C. Harding is one of the most remarkable men of the age. Regularly once or twice a year he starts a new Sunday paper at Indianapolis. As soon as the enterprise bankrupts he goes to St. Louis or Cincinnati and connects himself with one of the daily papers there. And then, when he gets money enough to pay his railroad fare, he goes back to Indianapolis and starts another Sunday paper.
