THE HON. MR. CAMP'S SUIT.

Yesterday we printed the declaration of the Hon. Benjamin F. Camp in the libel suit which he has brought against the Hon. Mr. Reid, of the New York Tribune, for defamation of character. The particular ground of Mr. Camp's grievance is that he was slandered by Mr. Reid, the particular slander, according to Mr. Camp's declaration, being that Mr. Reid, in the columns of the Tribune, called him a "deadhead," "a chronic deadhead." As to the truth or falsity of this accusation we have nothing to say. We do not know whether the Hon. Mr. Camp is a "chronic deadhead" or not, and we do not care. All we know about him is that he was near and dear to the Tribune long before Mr. Greeley began the education of the Hon. Mr. Reid and the other young gentlemen who are now, they assure us, carrying out Mr. Greeley's dying requests and commands, and keeping the prow of the old ship in the course he would have her sail in. If Mr. Greeley instructed his young men to call his old and true friend "a chronic dead-head" almost before his funeral was over, it opens a new vista in Mr. Greeley's character which the young men might explain. Mr. Camp was never called a chronic dead-head by the Tribune while Mr. Greeley lived, and if he has been pursuing this chronic dead business for thirty years it is strange that Mr. Greeley did not in the interest of virtue and morality expose him. Why should have he allowed him to prey upon hotels and railroads and theatres for a quarter of a century and remain silent, leaving it to the young men who succeeded him to make this heart-rending exposure? All these are points which will doubtless be brought out when the case comes to trial.

But there is another side to this entire case. The Hon. Mr. Camp is entirely too sensitive. What if the Hon. Mr. Reid has publicly called him a "chronic dead-head?" Is that any reason why he should rush into a law suit and retain an eminent criminal lawyer like B. F. Butler? Why does not the Hon. Mr. Camp imitate the example of the Hon. Mr. Reid? The Hon. Mr. Reid has been again and again called a "dead-head," a "dead-head" in the meaning that he says the Hon. Mr. Camp is one, and the charge has been proven. But the Hon. Mr. Reid has not on that account ever thought of bringing a libel suit, or asked fifty thousand dollars for the loss of his character. The Hon. Mr. Camp should have gone on with his "dead-head" business, if he is engaged in it, without paying the slightest attention to what the Hon. Mr. Reid said or wrote. When the Hon. Mr. Reid was charged with an undue yearning for free lunches and dinners at the Union League club-house, he did not absent himself from that place, but went on eating his free dinners with the most complacent satisfaction. He did not care whether they were paid for with money stolen from the Government, or whether they were paid for at all. This is exactly what the Hon. Mr. Camp should have done. In bringing a law suit he only shows that he has not yet attained the sublime indifference to a sense of decency and self-respect that the Hon. Mr. Reid has. If he wished to make the contrast, his law suit is all right. If not it is utterly nonsensical.

Upon looking over the Hon. Mr. Camp's declarations again, we find, in the the article in the Tribune in which he charges that the Hon. Mr. Reid slandered him, this sentence: "We wonder how many times in the last thirty years we have been called upon to expose that typical old rascal," &c. Coming from one of the "young men" who have been in the Tribune only about thirty months, this is decidedly rich. We should not be surprised if Mr. Camp won his suit.

VIRGINIA HOSPITALITY.

This is the way the Conservative papers of Virginia encourage public-spirited men to remain in the State through the columns of the Richmond Enquirer:

"As to Stowell and Platt, and their substantial possessions, it need only be said that they brought nothing into this State; we wish we could add against fact that they would carry nothing out of it."

Messrs. Stowell and Platt are representatives in Congress from Virginia, whose stility and industry entitle them to rank far above the average Congressmen. They have done more for the State during their terms of service than all their predecessors did before the war from the beginning of the Government, and are able to continue their proud record in that respect. Witness, in proof of this, the liberal appropriations for tide-water improvements, the reconstruction of the Norfolk navy yard, the selection of the latter for the building of sloops of war, and other matters of equal import. They are also entitled to credit for the development of private enterprises which afford employment to hundreds of citizen-laborers. Yet the Enquirer, assuming to represent the liberal sentiment of the educated and intelligent classes, finds fault with them because they have successfully applied their business capacity to the resources of a State which boasts that it invites just such men to become citizens within its borders. The honesty of the Enquirer, like that of Ananias, is unquestioned when it promises a hearty welcome and generous hospitality to Northern settlers.

No. 455 Pennsylvania avenue.
Washington and the Generals of the American Revolution, two vols. complete in one, with finely-engraved portraits from original portraits. Napoleon and the Marshals of the Empire; two vols. in one, with finely-engraved portraits. The Other Girls; by Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, author of We Girls. Real Folks, &c. Lyndie Weise; a sketch in graphy, by Geo. H. Trook. Substance of the Exposition of the Eldership Question; delivered by Rev. Jas. Sunderland, April 16, 1873. Manual of Presbyterian Law and Usage; embracing complete parliamentary law for church courts, compiled by Rev. Geo. H. Stuart, stated clerk of Washington City presbytery, and Rev. Byron Sunderland, D. D., pastor First Presbyterian church, Washington, D. C. It is the most complete work of the kind ever published. For this large and powerful body of Christian people there has long been needed a manual of regulations, so arranged as to be from within easy access a knowledge of the business and government of the Presbyterian Church, and which shall be a guide to every member, officer and minister of the denomination, and the publishers indulge in the hope that this little volume will prove the approbation of Presbyterians generally, and meet with the success which it deserves. my9
