LIFE IN WASHINGTON.

SKETCHES ABOUT THE CITY BY THE REPUBLICAN REPORTERS.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.—Marriage licenses have been issued to the following parties: Henry Brooks and Annie Jackson, both of Fairfax county, Va.; William F. Williams and Sarah E. Ridgely, Benjamin Martin and Eliza Beverly, William E. Smith and Margaret Mills.

BAD BOYS.—The attention of the police, if they have any spare time to do duty in that direction, is called to a gang of bad boys in the vicinity of the P-street circle. They amuse themselves by breaking windows with stones, and pulling up the flowers in the gardens in that locality.

ABSCONDING PARTNER.—Chas. Groedell and B. Ullman were engaged together in the junk business in this city up to about the 3d of this month. Groedell lived in Ullman's house and nothing occurred to disturb the harmony existing between the members of the firm until the 5th instant, when a check payable to the firm for $180 was received in Baltimore. Groedell disappeared with the check. Ullman also discovered that about $300 worth of silverware was gone from his house. The case was placed in the hands of Detectives McDevitt and McElfresh, who sent out descriptive circulars. Last Saturday Groedell gave himself up to Detective Pontier in Baltimore, and was immediately brought to this city. He was confined at police headquarters, and will have a hearing this morning.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE WILLIAM P. PARTELLO.—The funeral of William P. Partello took place yesterday afternoon from the residence of his son, No. 1332 Eleventh street northwest, and was attended by Columbia Commandery No. 2 Knights Templar and Mount Vernon Chapter No. 4. The remains were enclosed in a cloth-colored burial case, elegantly mounted with Masonic emblems, furnished by Gawler. The services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Jackson of St. Paul's P. E. church, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Steele, of St. Mark's P. E. church, and Prelate of Columbia Commandery. After services at the house, the cortege, preceded by Bosch's band, proceeded to Glenwood cemetery, where, after the beautiful burial service of the Masonic Order had been performed, the remains were consigned to the tomb.

WHISKY AND RELIGION.—Saturday evening Policeman Bryan, of the First precinct, found a colored woman named Julia Atwell lying on a door step on Third street, between C and D streets southwest, in a state of intoxication. She was making night hideous with her howls, crying "Glory, hallelujah! I gwine to go to heaven—fore de Lord, I do! Ro, bless de lamb," &c. The officer tried to quiet her and persuade her to go home, when she poured a tirade of abuse upon him. The "cop" stood it as long as he could, and then placed her under arrest. She resisted violently, pulled her hair, threw her bonnet away and kicked her shoes out into the middle of the street. The officer finally succeeded in getting her to the station-house, where the charge of drunk and disorderly conduct was preferred against her, which charge Judge Snell will hear this morning.

A DESPERADO CHARGED WITH HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—Henry Bush was arrested yesterday morning by Patrolman Bryan, of the First precinct, on a United States warrant issued on the oath of Peter Morton, charging him with highway robbery on the night of the 23d instant. Morton, the accused and another party were drinking together in a grocery store in South Washington. After they had filled themselves with all the ardent they could carry the parties left the store together. They had not gone far when, as Morton has alleged, Bush assaulted the complainant and robbed him of a silver watch and chain valued at about $20. Bush is a coal black man, about six feet high, of muscular build. He lives at No. 367 Virginia avenue southwest. He is known to the police as a very desperate fellow. He has several scars on his face which he received in a difficulty in a gambling house about a year since. He will have a hearing in the Police Court this morning.

FIRES.—Yesterday afternoon Officer Sullivan of the Third precinct, discovered fire in a house in Congress alley, Georgetown. The officer, with the assistance of some citizens, extinguished the flames without turning in an alarm. The fire was occasioned by a defective flue. About 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning fire was discovered in the roof of house No. 2008 K street northwest, the property of the Lowrey estate and occupied by a colored man named Marshall Burle. The fire originated from a defective flue, and the flames were extinguished by Officer Warwick, of the Fourth precinct, with the assistance of the occupants of the premises, without turning in an alarm. About 1 o'clock yesterday morning a woman named Marta Smith, living at No. 312 L street northwest, created a big excitement by setting fire to a lot of straw in dangerous proximity to dwelling house. The fire was discovered and extinguished in time to prevent damage. Her act is unaccountable. Shortly after 9 o'clock Saturday evening a coal-oil lamp exploded in the house of Mrs. Ryan, corner of Fourth and I streets northwest. Mrs. Ryan extinguished the flames by throwing a quilt over them, but in the attempt burned her hands quite severely. The Hook and Ladder Company responded, but did not go into service.

A RUM ROWDY ON HIS MUSCLE.—Andrew Elliott tried to clean out "Rum Row" last Friday. He went from one end to the other howling for somebody to come out and fight him. He called them saloons and said they had no blood. About 11 o'clock he stepped into John Usher's restaurant, where W. George Jones, the bar-keeper, was resting his elbows on the edge of the counter waiting for customers. Mr. Jones told his story to the Police Court on Saturday morning. "He picked up a French bottle and slung it at me. It hit the wall and caromed. That time it hit me on the neck here," said Jones, bending his head and putting his index finger on the back of his neck. "The bottle struck the wall and made a dent half an inch deep. The next time he hit me in the side and the next time in the neck again. Then he threw me down and I exclaimed, 'Are you going to murder me, Andrew?' When I got up I felt the back of my head and said, 'There, you've knocked my brains out,' but afterwards I found that it was the catsup and mustard that was in the bottles which were broken on my head, and I still lived."

Elliott claimed that he did not throw the bottles at Jones, but the Court was satisfied that he did, and fined him $30. He was also fined $5 for swearing.

CITY BREVITIES.

Twelve wanderers lodged in the station-house Saturday night.

Engineer Hoxie has given orders for the erection of nine new lamp-posts.

The police made thirty-three arrests Saturday and up to 8 o'clock yesterday.

Only nine "soaks" were arrested for drunkenness Saturday night. The gin mills are going to close up.

A colored man named Henry Prather was arrested by Officer Madigan Saturday night for disturbing a razor.

Saturday afternoon Sanitary Officer Connell procured a permit for Catherine Simmons, an insane pauper, and conveyed her to the Government Hospital for the Insane.

A colored man named Edward Cross plead guilty to the charge of stealing $25 from Henry Burnstein in the Police Court Saturday, and was sent to jail for six months.

The Uniformed Patriarchs of the District have accepted an invitation from the Culpeper lodge of Odd Fellows to be present at the anniversary of the lodge at Culpeper Court House, June 5.

The decorative committee of the Grand Army of the Republic have established their headquarters in the Congressional church, corner of Tenth and G streets northwest, where contributions of flowers will be received.

Messrs. Gardiner and Larner have been appointed delegates to represent the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District at the second annual convocation of the Masonic Relief Associations, to be held at Albany to-morrow.

A colored woman named Josephine Pollard was fined $100 or sixty days in jail on Saturday for keeping a disorderly house on Thirteenth-and-a-half street. She was complained against by women of her own class, with whom she had a falling out.

Annie Clark was fined $20 in the Police Court Saturday for carrying a razor, with which she slashed a man named John Hubert in the leg during a quarrel, in an alley between Twenty-first and Twenty-second and H and I streets, Friday night.

Saturday night Wm. Butler got into a dispute with a huckster in the Center market, named R. M. Higgins, about a debt of $90 which he claimed that Higgins owed him. The affair culminated in a rough-and-tumble fight, and Officers McKay and Rice wound up the proceedings by arresting both parties.

It is strange that a lady or gentleman cannot pass along the street with a bunch of flowers in their hands without having some little urchins running up to them with a "Please give me those flowers," "Do, please give me a rose," &c. Parents should teach their children greater courtesy.

John Shea, the "boss" rough of Louse alley, was charged in the Police Court Saturday with resisting and assaulting Sergeant Donoghue, of the police force. The officer had punished Shea very severely, and he showed the traces of a terrible struggle. A continuance until Saturday was granted, and bonds were fixed at $1,000.

John Hamilton was fined $10 in the Police Court on Saturday for assaulting John Hall, both colored. Hamilton's counsel said that he was trying to protect the virtue of his sister. His sister did not uphold this story. Hall was taking to one of his sisters at the gate when Hamilton came out, told him to "go 'way," and struck him with a stick and a glass tumbler.

Edward Reynolds was charged with the larceny of seventy five cents from B. C. Oliver before Judge Snell yesterday. Reynolds owed Oliver a quarter. He told Oliver to give him seventy five cents and he would give him a dollar. Oliver fished out the seventy-five cents, which Reynolds pocketed, but did not respond with the dollar. The Court thought such tricks should be disciplined, and fined the sharper $10, or thirty days in jail.

Mary Brown, a little colored girl about ten years of age, was charged in the Police Court Saturday with stealing a loaf of bread, a pound of butter and a package of yeast cakes, from Oliver Dulkeite's grocery. Mary went to the grocery and said she was sent there by a lady to get the things and have them charged to her. The lady was present in court, and testified that she did not send the girl. The Court thought such tricks should be disciplined, and fined the girl $10, and sent her to jail for fifteen days.

The case of James Lacey, the lottery huckster, was called in the Police Court Saturday, but the complaining witness, John K. Smith, did not appear, and an attachment was issued for him. There are two cases against Lacey. It is alleged that he has made a business of going from house to house in the "Division" selling slips. A number of the residents of the "Division" will testify against him. The cases were continued until Tuesday, and Lacey was released on his personal recognizance.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theodore Thomas' Second Concert.

The audience in attendance at Lincoln hall last Saturday evening, on the occasion of Theodore Thomas' second concert, if not so large in point of numbers present as that of the previous evening, were not lacking in a bountiful supply of enthusiasm. The programme was the same as was published in THE REPUBLICAN on Saturday morning with the exception that Handel's "Largo" was added by request. Want of space prevents us from noticing the performance of Mr. S. E. Jacobsohn, who played the violin solo, in our review of the first concert. This careful and painstaking artiste has never been heard to better advantage than in his playing of the simple but grand theme of this composition. His rich, full, powerful and sonorous tone, untainted by the scratchy or scraping sound so often produced by violinists, was sublime, and it is to be regretted that no opportunity was given him to still further display his ability. He is the best solo violinist in this country, and it is our hope that Mr. Thomas will soon visit us again, that the public may have an opportunity to hear him in a more elaborate composition.

The performance of the Largo, as a whole, was fully as good as that of Friday, though it suffered somewhat, a piano being used instead of a harp, the harpist being unavoidably called to New York. The introduction of the brass and reeds and cellos and basses at the end occasioned by the want of a more powerful organ is an improvement over the manner in which it was first produced at Steinway hall without these instruments, and increases in power the effect intended. Of the Second Symphony nothing can be said but in praise of its performance. At times the strings seemed a little weak in comparison with the wind instruments, but this could not be remedied except by increasing the number of violins, an impossibility here. The "Ballet Music and Wedding Procession," Feramors, Rubenstein, grows in favor in hearing; as also the suite L'Arlesienne, by Bizet, a talented Frenchman. The performance of both was excellent. When so much was good the "Funeral March of a Marionette," by Gounod, must not be forgotten or passed over. Of this composition the London Crystal Palace Programme says:

> This march is a fragment of an unfinished suite burlesque. At the commencement it is supposed that two of the members of the "troupe" have had a fight, in which one of them has unfortunately been killed. The "troupe" sorrowfully mourn the sad fate of their companion, and organize a party of pall-bearers, which then reverentially carry the corpse of their friend to the cemetery. The procession sets forth, and on the road the "troupe" converse about the vicissitudes of life, and reflect sadly that it required but one petty hard knock on the nose to knock the breath out of so talented an artist! As it is the middle of summer and very warm weather, some of the "troupe" begin to feel the way very long and weary-some, and feel the want of shaking their sorrow and their thirst at a tempting roadside tavern. They reflect that it is not the duty of the living to die for the dead, but that to enable them to "bear up" they must enter and partake of some soothing and refreshing fluid. The refreshment-takers enter into various details, bewailing the qualities of the defunct. Some good-naturedly praise, others use disparage with the profession) ill-naturedly discuss the merits of their late companion. "He was a good fellow," said one, "but without much talent!" said another. "How well he represented royalty!" said a third; "a more vulgar looking personage I never saw," said a fourth—and so on till, in the heat of discussion, they forget that the funeral procession has nearly reached the gate of the cemetery. They quickly resolve to rejoin it, avoiding, however, all appearance of undignified haste. They fall into their places and enter the cemetery to the same phrases as the one of the beginning of the march. The last two bars appear to make allusion to the briefness and weakness of life.

It is wonderfully descriptive, the instrumentation working out the mock scene in a wonderful way. It is one of the brightest and most piquant efforts the composer has given the public. Miss Annie Louise Cary sang her numbers with her usual grace and finish. She seemed to understand the poor acoustic properties of the hall much better than on Friday night, standing more to the front of the stage. She was encored, and responded twice with "In Questa Soulna," by Beethoven, and a new song, "Sunset," by Dudley Buck. She seems to have improved since her last appearance here. "Oh, fair dove! Oh, fond dove," as sung by her seemed to us to have a new meaning, the ending being particularly well adapted. The hall is badly ventilated, and the orchestra and audience seemed to feel the effect at times of the foul air. We cannot but express here the disgust felt by many lovers of music present on Friday and Saturday nights at a number of people, some of whom belong to the legations, and others well known in society, spoiling the enjoyment of people by taking care to arrive too late. At least they should be ladies and gentlemen enough not to disturb the enjoyment of others, but wait until a pause occurs in the performance, and then go quietly to their seats instead of irritating the orchestra and audience by the noise of their entry. In New York it is customary not to allow people coming late to pass to their seats during the time the orchestra is playing, and it would be a good thing to introduce the plan here. Nearly the whole of the first movement of the symphony was spoiled by these late arrivals.

Mr. James F. Joyce's Testimonial.

The topic of conversation in society and among amateur theatrical circles seems to be the testimonial tendered Mr. J. F. Joyce, a very popular young gentleman and favorite amateur actor of this city, by his legion of friends. Boucicault's charming comedy of "Led Astray" will be produced, which in itself should be a sufficient card to draw a very large house, as it is certainly one of the most beautiful plays ever presented upon the American stage. The piece is under the capable management of Mr. Thad. K. Sailes, who is confident of presenting a fine amateur performance.

The cast is an unusually brilliant one, each and every person being peculiarly adapted to their respective parts. It will be as follows: Hector Placide, Mr. J. F. Joyce; Randolph Chandose, Mr. W. L. Dennis; George De Lesparre, Mr. J. E. Randolph; Mount Gosling, Mr. E. B. Hay; Major O'Hara, Mr. H. E. Leach; Lafontaine, Mr. C. F. Mallard; Armande Chandose, Miss Kate H. Goodall; Countess, Miss Annie D. Ware; Mathilde, Miss Mamie Wallace; Baroness, Miss Gabrielle Randolph; Suzanne, Miss Cordelia Levy.

The sale of reserved seats will commence this morning at Ellis & Co.'s music store, and as a great many tickets have already been sold, those who have not yet secured seats had better go early and secure them.

The regular orchestra of the theatre has been engaged, new scenery is being painted, and every attention will be paid to the correct presentation of the play.

The Golden Jubilee.

One of the events of the celebration of the Golden Jubilee, next Sunday, will be the lecture at Odd Fellows' hall, by the Rev. F. E Boyle, upon "Pius IX and the Church in America." Father Boyle's oratorical ability is too well known to need comment, and his audience next Sabbath evening will doubtless be edified by listening to a finished orator and a lecture fraught with the results of deep and thorough reading.

THE EXCURSION TO HARPER'S FERRY.—The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have completed their arrangements for their excursion to Harper's Ferry on Decoration day. Those who intend participating in the affair will have an opportunity of indulging in bass fishing. There are good boarding accommodations at the ferry, and this, added to the beautiful scenery, will make the trip pleasant as well as instructive. The new bridge from the mainland to Byrne's island, also attractive. At the island two pavilions for dancing have been erected. At the island there are swings and other means of amusement for the especial benefit of children. Weber's brass and string band will accompany the excursion party from this city, and they will be entertained on the route by music. The island is beautifully shaded with magnificent trees of all kinds and descriptions. This excursion bids fair to be one of the most successful enterprises of the kind ever inaugurated in this section of the country.

CITY IMPROVEMENTS.—A permit has been issued to Thomas Young to construct a two-story brick dwelling on K, between First street and New Jersey avenue northwest, for $6,000; to Andrew Shaw to build a two-story brick dwelling on Six-and-a half street, between D and E streets, for $1,800; to Ann E. Boyle to erect a three-story brick dwelling on H, between Twenty first and Twenty-second streets northwest, for $5,200; and to Weaver & McKinler to construct a one-story market building on Bridge, between High and Potomac streets, Georgetown, for $5,000.

A Barkeeper's Battle With a Gang of Roughs.

[By Telegraph to the National Republican.]

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 27.—Early Sunday morning a gang of roughs, intoxicated, went to the hotel of Frank Aligeil, just outside the city, and declared that they proposed to clean the house out. They attacked the barkeeper, Charles Crocker, who to save his life, fired three shots of a revolver, one of which killed Edward Woodlock and two others received severe wounds. The gang was all arrested.

AN AQUATIC VICTORY

WON BY THE ANALOSTANS FROM THE THE UNDINES.

The Unexpected Result of Saturday's Race—Description of the Contest—The Undines Meet with Bad Luck.

The two mile race between the crews of the Undine Club, of Baltimore, and the Analostan Club, of this city, was rowed Saturday evening. It unexpectedly resulted in a victory for the Analostan crew. The day was unfavorable for good rowing. The wind was strong and the river was choppy, so that the pulling was very hard. About the time announced for the race dark clouds which had been gathering all day broke into showers of rain. This did not dampen the ardor of the hardy oarsmen, but it had a depressing effect upon many of the fair admirers of boating, and the crowd at the boat-house and upon the river banks was not so large as it would have been under other circumstances. The handsome boat-house of the Analostans was packed several deep with beauties in the latest spring styles, who came to bet gloves and ribbons upon their favorite oarsmen, and to take a hand or rather a foot in the dance with which all affairs under the management of the Analostan Club are wound up. All of the Washington ladies wore the little blue and white badges of the Analostan Club. There was a large party of ladies and gentlemen from Baltimore also present.

The enthusiasm displayed by the ladies in boating is the cause of the ambition displayed by many young gentlemen to become skilled oarsmen. They dress up in ridiculously tight and short pants and shirts, and pull and tug and double up on sliding-seats, and perspire and catch crabs and get wet all for the purpose of winning a smile from some pin-backed damsel. There are very few men who look handsome in a rowing suit. They have too much shoulder-blade or too little legs, or something or other the matter with their make-up, which the scant and gauzy rowing suit always displays to advantage. Whether it is the physical degeneracy of the human race or the natural ugliness of the human form that accounts for it, it is a fact that not one man out of ten will bear close inspection in tights. It would be unjust to say that all boating men row for the ladies' smiles, or that all of them need padding. The gentlemen of the Analostan club love the noble sport for the recreation and vigorous health they find in it, and there are few organizations which can show finer physical development among its members. The scene on the river in front of the Analostan house Saturday evening was a picture to stir the blood of youth.

Before the race the channel was filled with boats of all descriptions, freighted with gallant oarsmen and their fair guests. The club colors were flying from the boat-house, and the balconies were filled with laughing beauties, whose sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks attested to the pleasure which they took in the gay scene before them. The river bank was lined with carriages and spectators who were not fortunate enough to be among the guests of the club. On the bulk-heads of the docks and in the rigging of the neighboring vessels many of the crowd found eligible positions from which to view the race. There was a merry splashing of oars, and little feminine shrieks gave notes of warning whenever a collision was imminent.

The boats kept passing by the boat-house in pleasant confusion. Pungies, lap-streaks, working-boats, and nearly everything intended to be propelled by oars, made up the fleet. In some cases the oars were handled by ladies who were taking their first lessons in rowing from some blue-shirted, fresh-water Neptune. Ladies never can get the "hang" of striking the water with both oars at once, and they splash about with their oars describing many wonderful angles, like a patriotic infant's first performance with the drumsticks. Sometimes they get an oar stuck perpendicularly down in the water, and then there is desperate pulling and tugging to get it up again, and when it does come it goes up in the air and the fair amateur has an experience at catching crabs.

The half hour before the racing crews put out in the river was pleasantly employed in watching the many objects of interest.

About half-past five o'clock the two barges of the Analostan club, the "Falcon" and the "Analostan," cached manned by a dozen strong oarsmen, in the neat blue uniform of the club, swept away from the boat-house, and this was a signal of immediate preparations for the race. The stake-boats could be seen a mile away down the river, one with a blue flag and the other with a white one. The little boats began to row out of the course, and everybody looked towards the flag in front of the boat-house for the appearance of the crews. The Undines, in suits of blue, trimmed with white, first appeared carrying their light shell, which they deposited in the water. As they rowed away, they were greeted with cheering and waving of handkerchiefs. The Analostan crew, dressed in white with blue trimmings, soon followed, and met with an ovation. The crews rowed up to the starting point, opposite the foot of G street, about one hundred yards above the boat-house, and rested on their oars.

The tug-boat Fannie Gilbert followed the crews from the boat-house up to the starting point. On the tug were the umpire, Mr. Wm. Young of the Maryland club; Mr. Stewart Brown, judge for the Undines; Mr. John Corson, judge for the Analostans; Mr. C. W. Hayes, time-keeper; the Undine committee, consisting of Dr. J. H. Hartman, Wm. Porter and F. M. Guthrie, several members of the Analostan club and reporters.

The Undine crew had the channel or District of Columbia side of the river, and the Analostans were next to Analostan island. Both crews are composed of men of fine physique, though it will be observed that the Undines had the advantage of weight.

The Undine crew was made up as follows: R. K. Cross, bow, 5 feet 9½ inches, 150 pounds; E. J. Whitlesey, 2, 5 feet 9 inches, 155 pounds; Dr. J. D. Iglehart, 3, 5 feet 11 inches, 160½ pounds; J. H. C. Watts, stroke, 5 feet 11 inches, 150 pounds; total weight of crew, 623¼ pounds.

The Analostan four were as follows: O. D. Hall, bow; 5 feet 8 inches, 130 pounds; E. S. Maunder, 2, 6 feet, 150 pounds; J. R. Marshall, 3, 5 feet 8 inches, 148 pounds; J. R. White, stroke, 5 feet 10 inches, 158 pounds; total weight of crew, 586 pounds.

The Undines rowed in a paper shell built by Waters, of Troy, N. Y., weight 85 pounds. The Analostans rowed in a new cedar shell weighing 102 pounds, built for the occasion by Larkin.

Before the start the betting and the talk was all in favor of the Undines. Their reputation in Baltimore and the apparent physical superiority of the men were taken into consideration, and bets of two to one in their favor were offered without takers. The Analostans hardly expected to win the race. Captain Hall observed that they intended to do their best and trust to luck. "If we can keep the lead to the turn," he added, "they will have to pull hard to catch us."

Everything was made ready for the start at 6 o'clock, and the men rested on their oars waiting for the word, while the crowds watched every movement of the umpire and judges on the top of the tug. There was considerable parleying between the crews and the tug, during which the thinly-attired oarsmen were chilled by the brisk wind. Then a schooner, coming up the river under full sail, got in the way and came near running down the Analostan shell. The crew had to row out of position to avoid accident.

After the schooner passed the Analostan crew called out that their rudder was broken, but no attention was paid to the complaint. The start was made at 6:12. When the words "Are you ready" were pronounced, the Analostans gave a tug at their oars, and when the umpire shouted "go" they jumped away, and gained a lead of at least half a length upon their slower adversaries. The Analostans started off with a quick stroke of about thirty-four to the minute, and it was feared by their friends that they would use themselves up on the first mile. The Undines pulled leisurely—not more than thirty a minute, but did not give the other crew much ground. The fates seemed against the Undine crew. About a quarter of a mile below the starting point they met a tug with a schooner in tow which passed so near them that they were obliged to make a wide detour, hugging the District shore to avoid the "wash" of the passing vessels. The Analostans on the other side of the river had a straight, unobstructed course and they improved their opportunities.

The Undines pulled nobly, never varying their even, steady stroke, while all through the race the Analostans pulled hard, and seemed to appreciate the fact that in order to win the race they would have to do their best.

The Analostans were more than two lengths in the lead at the stake-boats. They turned in good style, and in doing so gained upon the rival crew, who made the turn much slower and more cautiously. Upon entering the second mile the Analostans immediately took the Undine's water, and kept about a length and a half in the lead. The Undines, by their powerful strokes, diminished this gap about half a length before coming in sight of the boat-house. The prospect of victory and the cheers of their friends seemed then to put new strength into the limbs of the Analostan four, and they spirted tremendously, increasing the gap between the boats. When they rounded Easby's point and came in sight of the boat house they were rowing a very rapid and telling stroke, and it was very evident that they could not be overtaken. The Undines, seeing the task was hopeless, rowed in as leisurely as they had rowed out. When the crews passed the boat-house the shore resounded with cheers, and a hundred handkerchiefs were waved from the balcony. The Analostans crossed the line nearly three lengths in advance. The Analostans rowed the two miles in 11 minutes and 59 seconds, and the Undines in 12 minutes and 6½ seconds. The Analostans and their friends were overjoyed at their unexpected victory. The crews of the barges gave their victorious brothers as they passed an aquatic salute, with oars aloft.

"Undine ahoy!" shouted the umpire when the Undines rounded up to the tug. "Aye, aye," was the response. "Have you any complaint to make?" The Undines replied that they had not.

When the Analostans rowed up to the float in front of the boat-house they were "evated" to a considerable extent. They were met at the edge of the float and captured bodily, borne triumphantly upon the shoulders of their enthusiastic friends into the boat-house, amidst great cheering and excitement.

The Undines took their defeat graciously, and were among the first to congratulate the winning crew. There was considerable pleasant chaffing, however. "The walking is good to Baltimore," yelled one enthusiastic Analostan man.

"Guess we'd have to walk if the Analostans had had blood enough to take our bets," was the cutting response of an Undine. After the race began the festivities. The handsome reception rooms of the club were cleared for dancing, and music and the notes of revelry sounded over the waters until late in the night. Many of the belles of the city were there and were happy on account of the victory of the Analostans. Though the Analostans won the race, their victory cannot be attributed to any superior skill or muscular development. Their adversaries were defeated rather by bad luck. Their curved course was longer than the straight course held by the Analostans, and they had to row further than the Washington crew, and faster, in order to make the time that they did. This was one of the fortunes of war, however, and they could not complain, but the next time they row they will give the victors a sharp struggle. The members of the Undine crew, and their friends left yesterday morning for Baltimore, after having been handsomely entertained by their brethren of the oar in this city.

SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Sermon at the Foundry M. E. Church.

At the Foundry church yesterday morning Mr. Brown selected as his text Romans, viii:14: "For as many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God." The theme of the sermon was the beginning, continuance and final triumph of spiritual life. He argued that the possession of spiritual life is the test of sonship with God, and that the possession of this life is the privilege of all mankind.

President Hayes and his little daughter Fannie were present, accompanied by a lady and gentleman now their guests. Mrs. Hayes is still slightly indisposed.

MOUNT VERNON.—The Ladies' Mount Vernon Association will complete their labors to-day. The contract for the steamer to convey passengers from Washington to the mansion is to be awarded. No session was held Saturday. Many of the ladies came to the city and took holiday and recreation after their labors of the week. The ladies will, after making their final report, to-day adjourn.
