THOSE who intend receiving on New Year's Day and those who do not will greatly oblige us if they will send the fact to THE REPUBLICAN office at the earliest time possible, in order that they may be properly classified. It is intended to publish the list in Saturday's double sheet.

A DOUBLE-SHEET REPUBLICAN of thirty-six columns will be published on Saturday, containing all the local, telegraphic, and miscellaneous news of the day.

Mr. Blaine's Alleged Attack on General Garfield.

Mr. Blaine's name has been publicly used in aid of a Democratic slander against General Garfield. That slander is that the professions by the latter, of friendship and support of General Mahone, were false and treacherous, and that, while he planned the coalition with the Readjusters and advised Republicans to join it heartily, he was all the time secretly against it and preferred Bourbon success. There is another slander laid at Mr. Blaine's door by his Democratic volunteer organs, and that is the assertion that General Garfield regarded as repudiation the Readjuster plan, which, in fact, he earnestly indorsed as honest.

The Chicago Times of Saturday last published these tales at great length as coming from Mr. Blaine. The Washington Post, of the next day, before the Times could have arrived in Washington, gave the same statement, much of it in identical language, and attributed it to "a near friend" of the late President, who, better than any one else, knew his mind and intentions. Mr. Blaine was here when the Post made its startling announcement and solemnly claimed for it great historical value, coming, as it asserted, from the highest possible source. The Post is very partial to Mr. Blaine, and its able editor is known to be on quite familiar terms with that distinguished citizen. The latter never allows any serious misrepresentation concerning himself to go uncontradicted. He has access to the great metropolitan papers, and has the art of being treated well by them. Silence is not a characteristic in his composition. Only yesterday he took the trouble to have the press dispatches state that he and President Arthur never differed as to the question of his retirement, and that "their personal relations continue as they have always been, entirely friendly and cordial." If this was worth saying, accompanied by his letter of last October to the President, is not his alleged misrepresentation of General Garfield on the Virginia question worth his attention?

THE REPUBLICAN asserts from personal knowledge and has abundant proof to sustain the assertions—

I. That General Garfield declared the Readjuster plan in Virginia to be honest and fair, and not repudiation, and

II. That General Garfield favored the coalition between the Virginia Republicans and Readjusters.

Mr. Blaine is represented as saying that General Garfield believed the readjustment plan to be repudiation, and that he was opposed to the coalition, preferring Bourbon success to such an alliance.

Those who desire to run Mr. Blaine (whether he will or not) for the Presidency as the candidate of the Southern Bourbons and their Northern Republican allies and dupes are getting rather too good a start by Mr. Blaine's silence. He will be at a disadvantage shortly among Republicans if he rests so quietly under the statements of the Bourbon press. It would certainly be very gratifying to the country to know whether Mr. Blaine really chooses Democratic editors and correspondents as his spokesmen, and, if so, whether he has been correctly reported by them when he represents the late President as playing the unworthy part of a deceiver and a hypocrite. Mr. Blaine's continued silence can only be construed as an evidence that he is unable to disclaim what has been imputed to him in the opposition press.

So far as the merits of the Virginia debt controversy are concerned, they cannot be affected by any man's opinions. The Readjusters have twenty-six majority in the Virginia Legislature. They will vote to pay every dollar of Virginia's two-thirds of the principal of the debt of the old State of Virginia (leaving the other one-third to be paid by West Virginia, as all Virginians favor) and every dollar of the arrears of interest due thereon. There will be no abatement or elimination. The only readjustment will be the refusal to pay compound interest. The debt so ascertained is said to be about twenty-one millions.

FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN, of New Jersey, who succeeds Mr. Blaine in the Department of State, has been twice a Senator, and was offered the position of Minister to England by Grant, but declined it. His uncle, Theodore Frelinghuysen, was the Whig candidate for the Vice-Presidency in 1844, and went down with Henry Clay before the victorious Democracy. Mr. Frelinghuysen is a man of more prudence and sound judgment than Blaine, and he will probably not sport an "aggressive foreign policy" unless there is some real occasion for it.—Courier Journal.

Art in Jewelry and Bijouterie.

Perhaps there could be no better test of the fact that the people of this country are growing in wealth and refinement than would be evidenced by a stroll through the great establishments of New York, in which articles specifically of taste and luxury, such as for years have been comprised under the general title of articles de Paris, are manufactured, imported, and sold. Such an establishment, for example, as that of Mr. Theodore B. Starr, at No. 206 Fifth Avenue, could by no possibility have existed in the New York of 1850, for in 1850 there were not rich people enough in New York, and the richest of them were not rich enough to warrant the investment of so heavy a capital in such a bazaar of decorative art. Such an establishment could not exist in the New York of 1881 were not the richest people of New York refined enough in their tastes and sufficiently enlightened in their perception of the relations of decorative art to the manners and even to the morals of a people to warrant the investment of so heavy a capital under conditions so exacting from the point of view of knowledge and of taste. There, from the massive and yet daintily-finished substructures in which the treasures of the house are nightly closed up, to the galleries of porcelain and of bronze on the upper floors, everything testifies to the thorough and skillful amalgamation of what the rudest races recognize as value, with value in the highest sense of art. It is not given to everybody, perhaps, even in this age of millionaires, to be able to decorate a Christmas breakfast table with such a peerless bracelet of emeralds and diamonds as may be found in this establishment, the patient and perfect outcome of years of study and selection lovingly given to the work by one of the most accomplished of living amateurs in this line. But it is given, or it should be, to everybody in this age of æsthetic culture to appreciate and enjoy the exquisite fitness of the treatment to the material and the intent of decorative objects of every kind which marks every department of this unique establishment, and makes it really rather a gallery than a bazaar.—New York World.

Chance and the Human Race.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

Is man a free agent, or is there some power not yet understood which impels him to think and reason in a certain way called inspiration? Was Columbus insane or inspired when he told the world of this new continent? Was Morse insane or inspired when he told the people that a wire communication could be made to send messages around the entire globe? Was Fulton insane or inspired when he told the world the vast ocean would yet be navigated by steam? Was the man insane or inspired who told the scientist at Washington thirty years ago that a horse could be made without any other connection to the pedestrian than the hind feet? It has always been so, when a man's mind gets out of the old groove of thought he is denounced as crazy. Quetelet, who was the keeper of statistics in Belgium for many years, made some very remarkable observations as to the frightful regularity with which

CRIMES AND REPRATES

Year after year are recorded the same crimes in the same order, with the same punishments in the same proportion to the thousand. Sorrowful condition of the human race! The number condemned to the prison, irons, and scaffold is as certain as the revenues of the state. We can tell in advance how many individuals will poison their fellows, how many will stain their hands with human blood, how many will be forgers, as surely as we can predict the number of births and deaths. ...gain he says: "Is it not absurd to suppose that, while all else is controlled by administrative laws, the human race alone is abandoned to blind chance?"

MORALIST.

General Brady's Big Heart.

In a conversation between a friend of General Thomas J. Brady and "Gath," the famous correspondent, published in the Cincinnati Enquirer recently, about the star-route prosecutions, "Gath" asked:

"Does he show timidity?"

General Brady's friend replied:

"Not a bit. If Dorsey would imitate Tom Brady's backbone he would get more respect. Brady is a kind if apparently a stolid man, and I will give you an instance. At one time, soon after I made his acquaintance, I drew out of bank all the money I had, about $300, and, paying my debts, had just about $78 left. When I got home he I dropped into Tom Brady's office and said: 'Well, I'm ready to set up the lunch to-day, for I have got this much money ahead of the world.' We went out together and spent an hour. That afternoon late came a dispatch telling of a terrible accident in my family that was summering in a distant State. One of my children, perhaps both, were dead. I had still $20 left after I should buy my ticket, and dropping a line to Brady, telling him what had happened, I started away. On my arrival at the place of suffering, to my surprise, I found a telegraph order for $500 from Brady, saying: 'I remember that you were short, and have sent you this so that a part of your anxiety may be relieved.' And with the tears which I dropped over my dead boy's corpse fell more for the kind heart of General Tom Brady."

An Anti-Monopoly Movement.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—From present indications there will be a powerful anti-monopoly feeling in the State Legislature, which meets next week, Republican as well as Democratic, and the railroad people, with their accustomed shrewdness, are beginning to make their arrangements in advance for dealing with it. Meanwhile it is curious to see how circumstances alter cases. It was an adroit proceeding on the part of the New York Central people to get a formal "indorsement" of Mr. Vanderbilt from that heretofore hostile organization, the Produce Exchange, the other day, on the assumption that he is acting in the commercial interests of New York in his controversy with the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio roads. The indorsement will be used at Albany, by and by, to break the moral force of the anti-monopoly batteries. It is understood that a live indorsement is in contemplation at the Chamber of Commerce, albeit that body, like its sister Exchange, has been nothing if not outspoken in its denunciations of Mr. Vanderbilt's "arbitrary policy," "unjust discriminations," "hostility to the canals," &c. Hence if the anti-monopoly people expect to make any headway they may as well make up their minds to fight the Commercial Exchange as well as Mr. Vanderbilt.

A Capable, Faithful Officer.

General John B. Stonehouse, assistant adjutant-general of the State of New York, is sojourning at the Ebbitt House. But he is not there as a gentleman of leisure. He is busily engaged adjusting the claims of New York upon the United States for advances made by that State for supplies and munitions and support of troops at the State depots for stated periods and while in transit from 1861 to 1866. The General has been engaged upon these claims for a dozen years, and, in consequence of his intelligent, painstaking work, several millions of dollars have been allowed and paid. He was made colonel and assistant general of the State early in the war, and proved so faithful and vigilant, always courteous and honorable, that he was promoted to brigadier-general and his salary raised to the highest grade by special act of the Legislature, in acknowledgment of his honest and successful service. He had during the war the opportunity and the power to gain fortune at the cost of tarnish. But simple, straightforward honor guided him. So he cheerily faces wife and children; so he meets the hearty greetings of friends; so the State and General Governments recognize this most faithful of public officers.

The New York Custom-House.

Things are badly out of joint at the custom-house in respect to the preparation of the trade statistics of the port, which are looked upon by merchants engaged in foreign trade as the key to the commercial position. Thus the weekly exports to be published to-morrow come down only to December 20; the character of the movement from that time to date is not known, nor will it be for several days to come. This delay, I am told, is in consequence of insufficient clerical force in the statistical department. The merchants have repeatedly called the attention of the collector to the default, and have likewise addressed the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject, but still there is no redress. Red tape is in the way. An appeal, I hear, will now be made to the President direct, in which case it is tolerably certain reform will follow. No man knows better than General Arthur the requirements of the custom-house, and the importance of early publication of the class of statistics alluded to, and he is usually prompt to act in such matters.—New York letter.

A Brute Sentenced.

Samuel Young, the young colored man who escaped from the Reform School on the 16th of last month, and attempted to outrage a respectable young white lady named Bertha Hoffman, on Maryland avenue, near Tenth street northwest, was before the Police Court several days ago on the charge of assault and battery, and the Government made out a case of assault, and gave the prisoner time to get some boys from the Reform School as witnesses, who, he said, escaped from the school at the same time he did. Henry Burk was brought from the Reform School to the Police Court yesterday, and in his testimony contradicted the prisoner's statement as to how he was dressed, and said that he wore a hat, which agreed with the description that the lady gave of her assailant. The Court sentenced him to six months in jail.

The Progress Club.

The Progress Club gave a hop at Sheldon's Hall Wednesday night, which was attended by a merry company. Among the participants were Misses H. Behrend, A. Behrend, B. Strasburger, B. Kaufman, F. Samstag, M. Rosenthal, of Alexandria; E. Rosenberg, Emma Bensinger, F. Goodman, F. Hush, of Danville, Va., and A. Wolf. Among the gentlemen were Messrs. D. Nachman, president; Ferd Frank, ballet master; Joseph Strasburger, L. Rasa, A. Behrend, M. Newmyer, Julius Lunsburgh, L. Kirsh, of Buffalo, N. Y.; M. Strasburger, M. Eiseman, Joseph Kahn, of Baltimore; M. Hamburger, S. Jacobs, of New York, and others.

"Two Souls with but a Single Thought."

Marriage licenses were issued yesterday to John F. Dyson and Lucinda Frazer, James E. Faulk and Sarah Ann Tait, John R. West and Annie E. Keatley, Albert Brown and Martha Wilkerson, Francis Shaw and Margaret Jackson, all of Washington; Robert Buckley and Mamie Fletcher, Fairfax County, Virginia; Lewis W. Murray and Sophia S. Wilson, William M. Backus and Constance H. Beall, Georgetown; Joseph Ashton, Fairfax County, Virginia, and Julia Thomas, Georgetown; Cornelius Ashton and Bettie Watson, Washington.
