NORTH CAROLINA.

LIBERALISM AMONG THE TAR-HEELS.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

There have been lately published in your journal several communications, all assuming that there is a "Liberal" movement in North Carolina. None of these state very clearly what this movement consists of or how it is to be led. Will the leaders be Republicans or Democrats, and from which party will come the followers? The discussions of the question are vague, and we are somewhat left in doubt as to the meaning of the correspondents. In some mysterious manner, however, Liberalism and anti-Prohibition are always mixed. We are given to understand that anti-Prohibition, as the basis of Liberalism, will sweep the State at the next election. But how? Are we to have avowed anti-Prohibition candidates, nominated by anti-Prohibition conventions? Many in North Carolina have thought that the question of Prohibition was fully settled last August, when the overwhelming majority of 116,000 was polled against it. What is the use of talking more about a question so decidedly settled? And do not the managers of deceive themselves when they suppose that any considerable number of voters will change from one party to another because of it? What are the facts? Early in 1880 the temperance people of North Carolina began a movement for prohibition. In February a convention, composed of respectable people—Democrats and Republicans, white and colored, of various religions, and many of no religion at all—assembled in Raleigh. This convention appointed a business committee, of which the writer was a member, and which met a like committee of the General Assembly, to discuss the whole subject. The legislative committee was composed about equally of Republicans and Democrats, and during the joint deliberations it was noticeable and frequently remarked upon that the Republican legislators were more pronounced in favor of prohibition than the Democrats, and some of them were vehement in their advocacy of the measure. The convention respectfully petitioned the General Assembly to enact an absolute prohibition law and adjourned. Then came the consideration of the matter in the Legislature, and, as in the committee, the Republicans strongly urged the

THIS "LIBERAL" SCHEME

PASSAGE OF A PROHIBITION BILL.

The result was not the law asked for by the convention, but the abortion submitted to the people, which was so overwhelmingly rejected. More Republicans in the Legislature voted for the measure in proportion to their number than Democrats. In the campaign which followed large numbers of prominent Republicans, as in the General Assembly, advocated prohibition. Gentlemen of that party of the most eminent respectibility, some of whom had held important offices in the State, and many whose counsels had never been rejected by their party associates, placed themselves in the lead of the movement. The popular vote in favor of the bill was 48,000. No less than 20,000 Republicans supported it at the hustings. The mistake which seems to be made by those who speak of a "Liberal" movement is that they underestimate the strength of the Republican Prohibition vote. It is an element which ought not to be ignored, and if it is attempted to disregard the men in the Republican party who voted in this way disaster will result.

THE PROHIBITION REPUBLICANS

have never, from the first, regarded this as a party measure. They have always wished, and desire now, to keep it out of party politics. They love their party and its principles, and would not be driven away for any consideration. There are hundreds and thousands of such Republicans in North Carolina. Those who voted for prohibition are not place-holders nor office-seekers; they are Republicans because they esteem the doctrines of the Republican faith. As a class they say little, but, while they make no noise, they are firm as a rock in sustaining their principles. Is it right to take such action as will cause them to abandon their party? And can the Republicans, already in a minority, afford to lose this strength? How will it be made up? Who maintains that enough Democrats can be depended on to restore the loss? If nothing is done to disturb the harmony of the Republican party it will maintain its strength and grow in power. There are enough vital questions to engage the attention of the people, upon which Republicans are agreed, without throwing in a fire-brand. The Democratic majority, in 1880, was only about five thousand. This may be overcome, but not by adopting resolutions in convention which will be distasteful to 20,000 Republican voters. The true solution of the Liberal movement is to preserve the integrity of the Republican organization, which at the last election polled more than 115,000 votes. The time has not yet come when North Carolina needs a Mahone, and if one offers himself an anti-prohibition platform will be a slippery one for him to stand upon. The people have been ready, with great unanimity, to vote down an obnoxious prohibition bill; but it does not follow that they will willingly vote for candidates who avow themselves, directly or by implication, in favor of the unrestricted manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

CERTAIN POLITICIANS OF BOTH PARTIES,

viewing with complacency the great majority against prohibition, assume that they created the popular wave; whereas the wave swelled up of itself, and these politicians, pigmies, were simply borne upon its lofty summit. They were tossed by it, but never directed nor controlled it. Already the mighty flood has subsided and the politicians are floating at an ordinary level as before. This letter is written because it is believed the whole facts have not been before presented through the columns of your widely-circulated journal. The writer aims to be impersonal, having no desire to stir up animosities, but, on the contrary, wishing to inculcate harmony in the Republican party of North Carolina. He blames no one for thinking differently from himself, freely recognizing the right for all to entertain any sort of opinions. He knows very many excellent Republicans who were on opposite sides of this non-party question. Many of those who differ with him are personal and political friends, and upon the temperance question they say, let every man have his own opinions which do not enter into party politics. It is believed the period has arrived when Republicans need to go [illegible] part of the Democratic [illegible] BALL.

Francis B. Lord's Will.

The will of Francis B. Lord was filed with the Register yesterday, and partially proved. The decedent bequeathes one hundred dollars to each of his grand and great-grandchildren, to be paid to such as are of age at the expiration of twelve months after his decease; to the minors, to the males in attaining the age of twenty-one years, and the females when they are eighteen years old. All the rest of the estate, real, personal, and mixed, is devised to his three sons, William, Francis B., jr., and John B. Lord, in equal shares, any amount that they may be indebted to him to be deducted from his share. The testator's lot in Glenwood Cemetery is left for all of his family, sons, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and their husbands and wives. William B. Lord is constituted sole executor.

Two More Brutes.

NEW YORK, March 24.—Tom Sweeney, of Wolverhampton, England, and Tom Donahue, of New Haven, Conn., who are matched for a prize-fight with hard gloves on March 30, met with their backers, this afternoon and posted the final stakes of $200 each. Sweeney won the choice for fighting ground. Both men are apparently in good condition.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE READING CLUB AND HANDY SPEAKER, No. 2. By GEORGE M. BAKER. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Washington: W. H. Morrison.

This is a fine collection of serious, humorous, pathetic, patriotic, and dramatic selections in prose and poetry for readings and recitations, and will be found of great value to members of literary associations and those who are accustomed to read before public assemblies, as many of the pieces are new, and all are capable of being made very effective.

FIELD BOTANY. By WALTER P. MANTON. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Washington: W. H. Morrison.

This little volume is intended as a hand-book for the collector of botanical specimens, and contains instructions for gathering and preserving plants and the formation of the Herbarians. It will be of valuable assistance to the beginner in botanical study.

CONVERSATION: ITS FAULTS AND ITS GRACES. Compiled by ANDREW P. PEABODY, D.D., LL. D., late Plummer Professor of Christian Morals in and Preacher to Harvard University. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Washington: W. H. Morrison.

Dr. Peabody has endeavored in this little book to bring together the principles which should govern conversation among persons of true refinement of mind and character, and to point out some of the most common and easily besetting vulgarisms occurring in the colloquial English of our country and day. The work comprises Dr. Peabody's address before a young ladies' school in Newburyport; a lecture delivered before a literary, scientific, and mechanics' institute; a reprint from the Fourth English edition of "A Word to the Wise, or Hints on the Current Improprieties of Expression in Writing and Speaking," and selections from two little English books, entitled "Never Too Late to Learn," and "Common Blunders in Speaking and Writing."

EUROPEAN BREEZES. By MARIE J. PITMAN (Margery Deane). Boston: Lee & Shepard. Washington: W. H. Morrison.

Of the many books of travel none will be read with more interest and pleasure than the bright, breezy volume now under consideration. The little bits of incidents, which are usually lost sight of in writers who give the results of their observations in the old world to the public, are here brought out with a delicate humor that adds a zest to the descriptions of persons and places visited, and gives a fresh attraction to the book. It will well repay perusal.

THE SECRET OF WINGS. By GEORGE B. STARKWEATHER. Washington: H. W. Beadle & Co.

The principles of the exquisite mechanism of wings is clearly set forth in this little work and the philosophy of flight is given an intelligent exposition. Whether the solution of the problem of aerial navigation will be aided by Mr. Starkweather's theories and investigations remains to be seen, but the explanations are ingenious and interesting.

Magazines.

The April number of the Eclectic Magazine is at hand and contains a very large number of noteworthy and readable articles. The table of contents contains "Science and Morality," by Professor Goldwin Smith; "A Modern Solitary" (meaning Obermann, the German Mystic); "Romance of Business," "Electric Progress," "The Revision of the French Constitution," by Joseph Reinach; "Mr. Swinburne Trilogy on Mary Queen of Scots," by G. A. Simcox; "Fashions and Physiology," by J. Milner Fothergill, M. D.; "A Guardsman's Story," "National Wealth and Expenditure," by M. G. Mulhall; "Oddities of Personal Nomenclature," "Crab Gossip," and "Robert Southey and Caroline Bowles." Beside these there are four well-filled editorial departments, literary notices, foreign literary notes, science and art, and miscellany. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York. Terms, $5 per year; single copy, forty-five cents; trial subscription for three months, $1.

The numbers of Littell's Living Age for March 18 and 25 contain "The Relations of Religion to Asiatic States," and "The King and His Successor," Fortnightly; "English Players in Germany, 1600," Nineteenth Century; "Romance in Business," and "Juliet," Blackwood; "Robert Southey," and "Caroline Bowles," Fraser; "The Social State of the Hebrides Two Centuries Ago," Cornhill; "Dutch Etiquette," Leisure Hour; "Things that a Lady Would Like to Know," "Swindling as a Fine Art," and "Servant Hunting," Saturday Review; "Friends and Friends," and "Wives in Training," Spectator; "Three Unpublished Letters of Horace Walpole," Academy; with instalments of "Robin" by Mrs. Parr, and "Lady Jane" by Mrs. Oliphant, and the usual amount of poetry.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine for March presents the following interesting table of contents: "Western Wanderings: The Newest American Railroad," "Pentock" (conclusion), "Martin's Horace," "The Fixed Period" (conclusion), "Lord Crawford and the House of Mar," "Recent Novels," "A Word with John Bright," "The Meeting of Parliament."

Literary Notes.

A novelty in summer books will be shortly published in the shade of "Summer Gleanings," by Rose Porter. To each day of the summer months has been given an appropriate selection in somewhat the style of the birthday book. On each page of the book a space for pressed flowers, another for daily jottings, and a third for pen or pencil sketches have been left, and the paper is of a character suitable for these. The book will be bound in several attractive styles, and will be published by White & Stokes, New York.

Mr. Frank D. Millet will contribute to the Century for April a carefully illustrated article on the Chelsea (Mass.) tiles, which mark a new and original movement in American art; and Mrs. Lucy M. Mitchell offers her third paper on ancient sculpture, dealing with "The Age of Praxiteles." This article is profusely illustrated, and is said to exhibit some of the best specimens yet seen of American wood-engraving.

James Bellew, bookseller, 711 Seventh street northwest, sends us a copy of a handsome pamphlet containing, besides a record of the ceremonies, &c., attending the funeral of the late Father Boyle, including the eulogy of the Most Rev. Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, an accurate portrait of the deceased.

Matthew Arnold's strong individuality and marked features will be shown in the frontispiece of the Century for April. A biographical and critical sketch of the poet and critic is contributed by Mr. Andrew Lang.

AT THE SOLDIERS' HOME.

A Tremendous Dust Kicked Up Over a Small Matter.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

People appear to have undergone little or no change since the time of our Saviour in the matter of discovering objects in their own eyes and in those of their neighbors. The small grain of sand in their neighbor's eye still assumes to them the dimensions of a huge boulder, while the saw-log in their own eyes dwindles down to a diminutive particle of sawdust. I am led to these remarks by the tremendous dust being kicked up by members of Congress, General Sturgis, and others over the fact that the managers of the Soldiers' Home use a small portion of the vegetables and flowers raised

[illegible] FOR THE HOME [illegible] their own De-[illegible]

[illegible] pose [illegible] presume Gen. [illegible] have been supplied [illegible] vegetables, &c., from post garden, [illegible] worked entirely by enlisted men, and [illegible] that these men were on extra duty. I presume they did not

PAY FOR THESE VEGETABLES.

To an outsider it would appear that the difference between these two cases was infinitesimal. That Congressmen should go into convulsions over this case is still more wonderful, when it is known that they spend thousands upon thousands of the people's money every year to keep up expenses—green-houses to raise flowers for the use of themselves and families. Besides, it is well-known they appropriate a large sum yearly for the purchase of stationery, and in consulting the list of the articles of stationery it will be seen that Old Webster was quite at fault in his definition of that word. Our savans have discovered that it means shaving soap, fine-tooth combs, revised editions of the Bible, &c. I can well understand how under a free translation the last two articles might come under the head of stationery, but the other articles are beyond me.

THE BIBLE, FOR INSTANCE, might enable a member to write his title to mansions in the skies, and the free use of soap might enable him to revise his speech for the Record, so as to soft-soap his constituents. Understand, I make no complaint about the practices I refer to, for all these charges and complaints arise from simple, petty jealousies of disappointed and designing men. If I were a Congressman I presume I should vote for appropriations for green-houses and stationery just as Congressmen do now, though in drawing my stationery I should stick to the old Bible, instead of going in for the revised one, as an old pack of cards is better than a new one, for you know them. O. W. R.

A Rich and Glowing Picture.

Special to THE REPUBLICAN.

SUMTER, S. C., March 24.—At the approaching April term of the United States Circuit Court in Charleston sundry election cases are to be tried, in which, if the attorneys for the Government are not incompetent and do their full duty, a rich and glowing picture will be presented of the graceless frauds and lawless violence by which the Democrats "carried the election" in 1880 and "counted in" their candidates all over this State. Whatever the juries may do with the defendants who may be tried, the proceedings will develop an amount of criminal oppression and barefaced robbery of the people's rights which will electrify the country. The approach of these trials has already stirred up the hornets' nest, and the Spirit of the Times of March 17, published here, in an editorial on the subject, significantly warns the witnesses for the Government that whereas on former occasions such witnesses have been allowed to return home and remain unmolested, it will not be so this time, as they will inevitably discover. In plain English, they'll catch —— X.

A Wrecked Life.

The following inscription, found in a churchyard in a little hamlet a few miles this side of Boston, is suggestive of a wrecked and shattered life: "He loved not wisely, but too Wellesley."—Yale Record.

THE OUTCOME OF ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

St. Patrick's day this year was one of those beautiful, balmy days that rarely indeed honor the birthday of old Ireland's tutelar Saint. The sun shone brightly and the air was laden with the promises of early spring. Everything was working for the highest enjoyment of the multitudes who were to participate in or behold the annual parade in honor of the day. Yet there were some unfortunate influences at work tending to mar the happiness of a larger or smaller number of people. At the same time, however, there were fortunate circumstances in conjunction, so to speak, in that one saint's influence, in the shape of St. Jacobs Oil, working special good on St. Patrick's Day. The matter is thus explained by Professor Arth, under his own signature, as below:

"I deem it a duty that I owe to myself and the general public to make a statement or two in regard to the wonderful curative powers of St. Jacobs Oil, which I have just had occasion to try for the first time. My profession is that of a musician. I was induced to accept of an engagement to parade with the Weber Band on the 17th instant, and the route proved to be a very long one. After arriving at my home and resting awhile I experienced a severe pain in my left foot. The pain increased so rapidly that in about a half hour I could not put my foot on the floor. Having heard so much concerning St. Jacobs Oil I resolved to try it, and procured some of it from T. G. Demoll's drug store, corner of Eighth and E streets southeast. The first application lulled the pain, which was so severe as to force me to call assistance and compel my removal to the open air in a fainting condition. The second application caused the swelling to gradually decrease. I was then removed to my bed, the pain diminishing each moment. I could now move my foot from the ankle joint with comparative ease. The fourth and final application accomplished the desired result. It induced a quiet and sound sleep until morning, when I awoke, scarcely realizing that I had suffered the night before. I had a similar attack about a year ago, which cost me over $20 and kept me in bed for six weeks. I then used all the liniments, lotions, and remedies that money could purchase, but secured not the slightest relief. In this attack how different. I was perfectly cured in one night. It shall henceforth be my special duty to recommend that wonderful substance, St. Jacobs Oil, to all my associates and the public also. It shall always be found in my house, and in my baggage when abroad. Success attend this wonder of the age.

"PROFESSOR GEORGE M. ARTH,
"918 Eighth street southeast, Washington, D. C."
