Garfield Monument Fund.

Let all remember that the Society of the Army of the Cumberland asks that on to-morrow—Memorial Day—contributions be made, in sums of one dollar and under, for the erection of a monument to the late President Garfield. All contributions received at this office will be duly acknowledged and paid over to the proper authorities. This is by request of the committee.

Dibble and the Mississippi River Improvements.

On the 17th of April the President gave impetus to the efforts in Congress for the improvement of the Mississippi River and the protection of its valley by a special message, the earnestness and directness of which left no room for doubt of his purpose to exercise all the influence he legitimately could upon that momentous question.

The Senate responded by the passage of a bill, upon which was engrafted a proviso to the effect that none of the money appropriated should be expended in the repairing of levees, and this proviso was in a measure neutralized by a counter proviso to the effect that such an expenditure might nevertheless be made, if necessary to the improvement of the channel.

The Senate bill is now on the Speaker's table of the House of Representatives, awaiting the resumption of the public business by that disturbed body. When it shall come up for consideration it is to be hoped that it will be shorn of this meaningless, or double-meaning proviso. From the formation of the Constitution there have been many similar instances where, by a species of skilful rhetorical legerdemain, great objects have been defeated or paralyzed by dilution, equivocation, and indirection.

The Mississippi River receives the water fall of twenty-eight States and Territories, and has for its tributaries forty-two navigable rivers, which furnish water transportation to twenty-two States and Territories. Its waters have been kept under some restraint between its banks by nearly two thousand miles of levees, constructed by the people of the region menaced by them at an expense of forty millions of dollars. Of these two thousand miles of levees, extending from Cairo, Ill., to the Gulf of Mexico, only about one hundred miles needs rebuilding at an expense of about three millions of dollars. An appropriation for this purpose is sought.

Aid is not asked for the purpose of giving value to lands now overflowed. There is no claim that the reclamation of private lands is any part of the duty of the Federal Government. Nor is it claimed that Congress has any power to appropriate money to thus benefit private interests. The arguments against repairing the levees have been based upon a misunderstanding. As well might an invading army march unresisted through our territory on the ground that the public Treasury could not be drawn upon to protect private property from its ravages as for the destructive power of the Mississippi River to go unchecked by national intervention, because to stay its work of general ruin would incidentally protect some acres of farm land from overflow.

The Mississippi River Commission was created three years ago, by act of Congress, "to take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct permanently, locate and deepen the channel, and protect the banks of the Mississippi River, improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof, prevent destructive floods, promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service." These objects embrace protection from destructive floods as well as the improvement of navigation. If manufactures and labor interests may be fostered by a revenue system, if a life-saving service may be supported on our coasts, and quarantine regulations be maintained for the protection of health by direct appropriations by Congress, what room is left for argument against protecting from danger by inundation the two millions of our people who dwell within the forty-eight thousand miles now subjected to devastating floods in the lower Mississippi. Shall they not share in "the common defense" and "the general welfare" to promote and provide for which the Union was established and has been preserved? Shall their lives be forfeit to the hostile river which they have not the right to control? Shall the mighty waters pass through breaks in the levees in Arkansas and drown the people of Louisiana who cannot stir in their own defense? Is our boasted Nation with a big N lacking in authority to protect life, health, cities, towns, railroad, and telegraphic property, postal routes, and the continuity of our great transcontinental railroads built by government aid, assailed as they are by this great river, which Calhoun designated as "an inland sea" nearly forty years ago?

Can millions be expended on rivers and harbors to protect commerce, and the line be drawn at the facilitating of the sailing of vessels? If so, then still the breaks in the levees of the Mississippi must be repaired by national appropriation, for the reason that there cannot be a channel without two sides. The Mississippi River Commission, composed of our most expert and scientific engineers, decide that the channel must be deepened by contracting it in width at six different points for an aggregate distance of one hundred and ninety-four miles. This is for the purpose of increasing the rapidity of the current, and causing it to wash into the bottom, which is of "a tenacious blue clay, much like marble." This contraction of the channel will, before deepening the stream, cause a back rise, and the immense volume of water thus prevented by the United States government from going its natural way to the Gulf will be driven through the one hundred miles of broken levees, and spread over the vast low region behind the great levee system, nearly equal in area to all the New England States! If the federal government, in the exercise of its constitutional control over the Mississippi River, thus temporarily retards its flow to the Gulf, must it not in common honesty repair the banks so that they will safely confine the waters thus impeded? This is the narrowest view, but it is broad enough to answer all doubts, and to demonstrate the unwisdom and the injustice of any ambiguous proviso upon which to hang a construction subversive of the objects of the appropriation

We invite the attention of the Representatives in Congress from Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi to the foregoing observations. We submit to them, in all kindness, the question whether they cannot be better engaged in joining with the President in making friends for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and the protection of its valley, than they can in revolutionary and exasperating tricks to maintain in his seat a man who was sent here by a mock election to fill a pretended vacancy, caused by the death of a man who was beaten more than eight hundred votes, according to the count of the Democratic election managers. They will be confronted with this question during the coming canvass. The rascalities by which O'Connor was counted in against Mackey, in the face of Democratic returns, are a travesty upon popular government The death of the defeated Democratic candidate, O'Connor, created no vacancy, and the alleged election of Dibble to a vacancy which never existed is an improvement upon previous Bourbon outrages.

There can be no other business so important to the country at large as that now being done by the Republican majority in the House, namely, the vindication of the right of the people to be represented in the law-making branch of the government by the men for whom a majority voted. Not to enforce this right would be to basely surrender republican government to its contemners. A Congress controlled by defeated men would have no just claim upon the people for obedience to the laws it enacted.

There can be no business in which the people of the South can have less interest than in the insane clutching of the Bourbon Democracy for the power they can never regain. If the desire of Mr. Dibble to usurp Mr. Mackey's seat is not more vital to the suffering population of the Mississippi Valley than the consideration of their interests, we shall hope to see their Representatives consent to a vote on the South Carolina contest after six hours of open debate.

In any event the Republican members, and the faithful Liberals who are acting with them in this struggle for the rights of majorities, cannot render any more noble or patriotic service than by pursuing it to the end, and using all the power of the majority to bring it to a speedy determination.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

IT will be remembered that Mr. Chalmers was dear to the Democratic soul and a trusted leader in the councils of that party until he issued his valedictory. Mr. Chalmers did not claim at any time that he had been elected by the voters of the Shoestring District, but he did claim—and was entirely correct in so doing—that he had such a case as his Democratic brethren of the House could make a stand on and yet be entirely consistent with their record

THE hundreds of pure women who earn bread for their children or keep themselves from want by hard work in the Government Printing Office ought to be spared such cruel insult as is implied by referring to that establishment as a "house of prostitution." Our limited observation has shown us that the good and the evil are pretty thoroughly mixed in all grades of society. Those who feel chivalrously inclined to hurl rocks at women may find more conspicuous targets for that sort of practice than can be found at the Printing Office.

MEN and brethren of the Republican household of faith, let us be mindful to exercise charity toward this old Democratic party. When we consider the sincerity, the devotion, the humility with which it worshipped at the shrine of human slavery for forty years, failing not, both in season and out of season, to bend a pliant knee and bow a reverent head at the call of its exacting master, can we wonder that it still sulks over the ruins of its old altars? Can we reasonably expect until another generation of Democrats shall come upon the stage that the party will rise up with one accord, and with cheerful grace, to bring its thank-offerings to the altars of freedom? "And now abide three things—faith, hope, and charity—and the greatest of these is charity." Let us be charitable.

IT is annoying and exasperating to have American citizens who are charged with no crime arrested and imprisoned by any foreign power. But the case recently reported from Germany is altogether unlike the cases of the American suspects in Ireland. The latter had no charges laid at their door, while this German-American is conceded to have been a deserter from military service in Germany. We have no treaty with the German Empire covering such cases as this, and it is doubtful if such an agreement will ever be made. It may be doubted if even our own government would consent to forego its claim on an American who should desert from our Army, secure naturalization in Canada, Mexico, or in any other country, and then come back to his old home. The best thing for our German-Americans to do is to keep out of Germany if they left that country after being duly notified to report for military duty.

CONGRESSIONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Proceedings of Saturday—Treasury Matters—Decoration Day Order—The Doyle Stolen Bonds—Bonded Spirits Bill—Investigating Charges Against a Railroad.

In the House on Saturday Mr. Reed presented a privilege report from the Committee on Rules amending rule sixteen so as to read: "Pending a motion to suspend the rules, as on any question of consideration which may arise on a case involving the constitutional right to a seat, and pending the motion for the previous question, or after it shall have been ordered on any such case, the Speaker may entertain one motion to adjourn, but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other motion until the vote is taken on the pending question; and, pending the consideration of such case, only a motion to adjourn or to take a recess—but not both in succession—shall be in order, and such motions shall not be repeated without a further intervening consideration of the case for at least one hour." Mr. Randall—I demand that the report lie over for one day. Three or four dilatory motions were then submitted, pending which Mr. Calkins asked and obtained unanimous consent to submit the counter proposition adopted by the caucus to that submitted by Mr. Blackburn Friday. Mr. Randall—The proposition is not satisfactory, and I object to further discussion. Several roll-calls followed on dilatory motions, which showed that the Republicans lacked two of a quorum. At 10 o'clock, on a motion to adjourn over, the Republican force fell off to 136, while the Democrats contributed only two votes, and a call of the House was ordered. The House then settled down to a session of perfect rest, and no attempt to renew the contest was made for a few hours. Shortly before 4 o'clock further proceedings under the call were, on motion of Mr. Reed, dispensed with. Mr. Dunn, of Arkansas, introduced a joint resolution appropriating $100,000 to be expended by the Secretary of War for the relief of persons rendered destitute by the recent overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Referred. The House then adjourned until Monday.

The corrected official copy of the substitute prepared by the Senate Finance Committee Saturday for the bonded spirits bill makes the first section read as follows: "All warehousing bonds hereafter taken shall be conditioned for the payment of the tax on the spirits as specified in the entry, and of the interest on the tax if any has accrued under the provisions of this act, and before removal from the distillery warehouse, or special bonded warehouse, and within five years from the date of their first entry into warehouse. The time within which distilled spirits heretofore entered for deposit in distillery warehouses or in special bonded warehouses are required to be withdrawn therefrom pursuant to the conditions of any maturing bond taken within three years prior to the passage of this act upon the entry of such spirits into such warehouses shall, on written request being made as herein specified, be extended for a period not exceeding five years from the date of the first entry of such spirits into warehouse; but such extension shall not be made in any case unless there shall be indorsed upon, or appended to, the warehousing bond a written request therefor and an acknowledgment of their liability under the terms of said bond for the period for which the extension is granted, together with interest on the tax which may accrue under the provisions of this act, as if the same were inserted in the body of said bond, by the principal and sureties in the bond, to be duly executed and acknowledged by each of them before a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or some officer authorized by law to take the acknowledgment of deeds; provided, that the sureties on said bond are, at the time of such request, satisfactory to the collector, and, if not satisfactory, or if the sureties shall refuse to make the request and acknowledgment aforesaid, that an additional or new warehousing bond, with sureties satisfactory to the collector, shall be given."

A statement having appeared in public prints that a number of what are known as the "Doyle bonds" have been stolen or retained from the custody of the prosecuting officers of the government, and by a government employe sold to certain persons in Chicago, Peoria, Ill., and elsewhere, the Secretary of the Treasury on Saturday ordered a recount of these bonds, with the following result: Number of counterfeit bonds reported to have been taken from the possession of James B. Doyle at the time of his arrest, 204, and fourteen coupons. Of the foregoing, General Leake, United States attorney at Chicago, reports having in his custody 192 bonds and the fourteen coupons. Six are temporarily in possession of the Secretary of the Treasury, and six are reported to be in the custody of the chief of the Secret Service Division. The aggregate of these numbers covers exactly the quantity taken from Doyle. In addition to the foregoing, there were surrendered to the United States government by the Second National Bank of Peoria, Ill., three bonds of like character to the 204, which had been cut in halves by Doyle as collateral for a loan of $3,000 obtained by him from the bank. These three bonds are also reported by the United States attorney at Chicago as being in his possession.

The Attorney-General is investigating charges made against United States District Attorney Stickney, of the northern district of Florida, filed at the Department of Justice by friends of Bishop Payne, a colored citizen, who was put off a train in Florida, in violation, it is alleged, of provisions of the civil rights act. It is charged that Mr. Stickney when called upon by Bishop Payne did not evince much zeal in investigating the cause of complaint. The affidavits filed, it is understood, show that Bishop Payne was traveling on a half-rate ticket, such as are issued by Southern railroads to clergymen, and the conductor, mistaking it for an excursion ticket, ordered the holder to take a seat in a car with a number of colored people who were traveling on half-rate tickets. Mr. Stickney, who is here making his defense, says that the complaint of Bishop Payne against the railroad company is undoubtedly just, and that he had no intention in absenting himself from his office for a short time to avoid the complainant.

It has been practically decided that the House requirement of ninety days' notice for the retirement of national bank circulation shall be stricken out of the bank charter extension bill and a new provision inserted in lieu of it. The new provision on this subject is to allow deposits of currency for the purpose of releasing security bonds and retiring circulation to a maximum amount not exceeding—say $8,000,000 per month, the release of the bonds to be made in all cases in the exact order of the reception of the deposits by the respective banks within the proposed maximum.

Secretary Folger has detailed Captains Sileer, Gabrielson, and Fisher, of the Revenue Marine Service, and Surgeon Walter Wyman, of the Marine Hospital Service, as a board to examine the graduating class of revenue marine cadets, who have been ordered here from the school ship Salmon P. Chase, now at New Bedford, Mass. The examination will begin to-day.

Acting Postmaster-General Hatton has issued an order addressed to all postmasters, directing a general observance of Decoration Day by closing all post-offices, except in the large cities, between 10 a. m. and 5 p. m. on Tuesday next. In large cities postmasters may exercise their judgment in fixing the hours.

Mr. George S. Bell, for the past four years custodian of the vault of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, was on Saturday dismissed for carelessness, and Captain T. N. Burrill was assigned temporarily to the position. The dismissal does not in any manner reflect upon Mr. Bell's integrity or honesty.

The Census Office reports that it has printed, of completed statistics, twelve reports, embracing 2,276 pages. Three more are stereotyped, of 258 pages, and eight other reports are in the Government Printing Office, and eleven in the Census Office waiting to be printed.

At the close of business Saturday United States called bonds had been redeemed at the Treasury as follows: Under the 106th call, $19,643,800; 107th call, $17,494,850; 108th call, $18,258,250; 109th call, $4,045,200; 110th call, $3,796,750, and 111th call, $3,508,600.

Alonzo Bell, of the Interior Department, will deliver the memorial oration before Post No. 19, Grand Army Republic, Philadelphia, this evening, preparatory to the decoration ceremonies on which he will participate to-morrow.

The lawful money in the Treasury Saturday for the redemption of notes of banks reducing circulation was $25,929,657; of banks in liquidation, $7,781,629.90; of failed banks, $1,144,588.70, making a total of $34,855,876.60.

The Treasury Department has extended the time during which animals and vehicles from Mexico may remain in the United States without bond from three to ten days.

A joint resolution has been adopted in Congress extending the fishing season in the District of Columbia from May 30 to June 15.

The 114th call for the redemption of bonds of March 3, 1863, continued at 3½ per cent. from July 1, 1881, was resumed on Saturday.

Couldn't Be Imposed Upon.

An old lady, who lives and pays taxes out Desvisadero street, rushed into Postmaster Cley's private office the other day in a terrific rage. It was only after she had biffed the General over the nose with her umbrella, and bumped his head on the desk four or five times, that the clerks could hold her back long enough to explain that it wasn't his fault that the young lady next door got twice as many love-letters as her daughter.—San Francisco Post.

Lost for Eighteen Years.

Mrs. Jeremiah Billingfelt, after spending eighteen years in an hospital at Lancaster, Pa., has just been discovered by her relatives, and taken to her mother's home in Fremont. They had supposed that she died long ago. She was placed in the hospital by her husband, from whom nothing has been heard since 1870.

The Result.

The man who buncoed Charles Francis Adams out of $18,000 is on trial for the crime at Boston. It is believed that he will be found guilty and sentenced to be frozen to death by one of Mr. Adams' smiles.
