SCRATCH.

The dogs came straying in
From the hollow under the hill,
But oh! for a Duke of Argyle pole
Or an anti-cathartic pill.

For the fleas came in with the dogs
And the itch came in with the fleas,
And then 'twas clawing for sundry bites
On necks and backs and knees.

Scratch! Scratch! Scratch!
On the cuticle red. Oh! flea,
I would an I were a pile-driver,
That I might sit down on thee.

A Dismal Romance.

"Good-by, Muleahey."

"Bon soir, Ethel," replied a tall, stately youth, whose pants flapped dismally in the soft June zephyrs about three inches above his sumptuous feet.

"Will you come again Saturday night, pet?" asked Ethel Redingote, coyly placing her hand on Reginald Muleahey's shoulder.

"I cannot," was the reply, in low, suppressed tones.

"Why not?" asked the girl, a look of pain flitting at a single fill over her spiritually fine features.

"Because," said Reginald, deftly kissing her while she kept watch for the old man, "I have an engagement to beat three aces for a man that evening."

The girl looked at him again as he stood there in all his beauty and strength. "And would you I are me for three aces?" she asked in low, tear-stained tones.

"Yes," replied Reginald, "I certainly would." For an instant neither spoke. Presently the dog came up the garden walk and bit Reginald on the first base. He turned, went slowly away, and never showed up again.—From "Severed by Fate," by Frank Hagerty's Monkey.

A will, purporting to be that of Edmund Connelly, of Fairfax County, was admitted to probate in 1868. In 1875 Thomas Kerns, being, as he supposed, on his death-bed, stated to Father De Wolf that the will was a forgery and his work. Recovering, however, he retracted the confession. A suit by the heirs to set aside the will is now in progress in the Fairfax circuit court.

The Nottoway County correspondent of the Petersburg Index-Appeal says: The wheat crop, which has heretofore given promise of a fine yield, has been attacked by a new enemy—at least, new to the farmers of our section, as I have not yet met a man who has ever seen it before. It is a little green bug or species of plant louse, which attacks the wheat in the head, attaching itself "by the million," in all stages of growth and development, around the stem or base of the heads, and seem to be subsisting on the juices that should go to the production of the grain. The effect will be no one can foretell, but it seems that myriads of insect enemies suck the life-blood of the plant at the most critical time, its existence cannot result otherwise than in damage to the crop.
