HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW: A MEDLEY IN PROSE AND VERSE. By RICHARD HENRY STODDARD. New York: George W. Harlan & Co. Washington: William Ballantyne & Son.

To those who loved the beautiful poetry of Longfellow (and that includes every lover of literature in the land) this book will be thoroughly welcome. Differing from the work of Miss Blanche Roosevelt, which brings the reader into close and intimate personal companionship with the poet in his home life, the effort of Mr. Stoddard is to give a critical estimate of the value of Longfellow's literary work, comparing it and contrasting it with that of his contemporaries. There is much that is biographical in the work, and the various stages of his development are carefully marked and noted. The perfection of Longfellow's work in every branch of song and the completeness with which every subject is treated is thoroughly shown, and a pleasant comparison—or hardly that, but a statement of the different mental habits of Longfellow and Tennyson is made in referring to the two poems of "Evangeline" and "The Princess," which were both published in 1847. "Each," says Mr. Stoddard, "shows its writer at his best as a story-teller, and if the mediæval medley surpasses the modern pastoral in richness of coloring—and I think it does—it is surpassed in turn by the tender interest, the pathetic feeling of its younger rival. Both poems are curious as betraying the mental habits of their authors—the never satisfied taste of one, the easily and permanently-satisfied taste of the other. A great many lines have been written in and out of 'The Princess'—the divine lyrics between the books have all been written in—but 'Evangeline' stands to-day, I believe, as it was first printed. The English poet always quarrel'ed with his work; the American poet never quarrel'ed with his work, nor with any human being if he could help it." There is one point in relation to the works of Longfellow which deserves especial mention, and that is the frequency with which his poems have been selected by composers for musical illustration. Two have been elaborated into operettas, "The Masque of Pandora" and "Victorian, the Spanish Student." There have been eight cantatas composed from his poems, one, "The Bells of Strasburg Cathedral," from "The Golden Legend," being by the celebrated Franz Liste. Of our thirty two, three, and four part songs which have been written upon Longfellow themes the most notable is the composition by Rossini on "Hear Ye Wahlo and God O'erhead." The songs for single voice are too numerous to remember at present.

THREE IN NORWAY. By TWO OF THEM. 12mo. pp. xv., 241. Porter & Coates.

This is an English book, telling the adventures of three gentlemen hunting reindeer, catching trout, paddling canoes, and making themselves generally merry in camp among the lakes in the interior of Norway. They spent three months on this gypsy excursion, in a region little known by the stranger, living chiefly upon the spoil of their rods and rifles, and the jovial spirit of their holiday is admirably preserved in their jovial book. For the satisfaction of sportsmen it should be said that the stories of hunting and fishing appear to be veracious, and the exhuberant humor of the writers vents itself upon the accessories, where a little playful exaggeration will do no violence to the claims of serious history. Certainly the "Three in Norway" are vivacious and entertaining companions for these idle summer days; and we doubt not that travelers in search of a new sensation will find them competent guides to the majestic mountains and teeming lakes of the Jotunfjeld. The reader cannot help a liking for all three.—John, the Irishman, so called because he was christened Charles; the Skipper, who "was rather thin and terribly tall, but remarkably roomy inside," and who "spoke Norse with great elegance and fluency, but did not understand it at all," and Evan, whose "notion of keeping accounts was to put his receipts into one pocket and his disbursements into another."

The domestic economy of the camp is described with interesting minuteness, and several menus are printed which almost make one's mouth water. The three made their own bread, baking it in a covered tin pail in a hole in the ground. A hot fire was kept in the hole for some time, then the embers were drawn out, and after the pail had been put in the coals were raked over it. The product seems to have been highly satisfactory.

TANIA'S PERIL; OR, THE EDGE OF AN ABYSS. By HENRY GREVILLE. Philadelphia: T. B. Petersen & Brothers.

This is an unusually brilliant and enthralling tale of love, seasoned with caustic wit and a vein of pleasing and sparkling humor. Its gifted author has never surpassed it. "Tania's Peril" may be named with Bulwer's "Last Days of Pompeii," and Dickens's "Cricket on the Hearth," and will not suffer from comparison with them. It is an exceptionally bright and interesting society comedy. The scene is laid in Russia, where Henry Greville is most at home, and the characters move in a high social sphere, though glimpses are given of the peasants and their superstitions. The incidents are as a rule quiet, but intense. The plot is exceedingly neat and effective, while the characters are drawn with remarkable vividness and power. Orianof struggling between love and duty, Souratine's calm and perfect trust, and Tania's wit and sterling sense make a deep and lasting impression upon the reader; in fact, everything about the story is of the most delightful description, and should more than please every lover of fiction. The translator, Mr. George D. Fox, has most effectively performed his work, and the book will, no doubt, meet with an extended sale.

PEN PICTURES OF MODERN AUTHORS. Edited by WILLIAM SHEPARD. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Washington: James J. Chapman.

The series of sketches, anecdotes, and personal reminiscences relating to the principal modern authors, which make up this volume, are most entertaining and will be read with great interest. There are delightful bits of gossip in regard to Carlyle, Dickens, Tennyson, Emerson, George Eliot, Thackery, Bryant, and other writers of the present century, which bring a nearer and better acquaintance with those whose works have so long charmed us. The editor has been careful in his selections, both of authors and incidents, and the brief sketches of the masters of prose and poetry will leave more lasting impressions than the labored efforts of detailed biographers.

THE DESMOND HUNDRED. Boston: James R Osgood & Co.

This is another of the Round Robin Series published by Osgood & Co., and is a pleasant story; the scene located in a New England village. The characters are well drawn, especially the two principal females, Honora Desmond and Nagareth Sampson, each in sharp contrast with the other and each with her own particular points of excellence. The sturdy honest frankness of Dr. Sampson is also finely portrayed, and one becomes attracted to him even at the outset, the regard increasing to the close of the book.

THE ADVERTISER REPORTER. Janesville, Wis.: Publishers Commercial Union.

This little book contains a record of prominent advertisers and advertising agents throughout the United States and Canada, together with their credit and financial standing, name, business, and address alphabetically arranged. It is a ready reference for the publishing fraternity and is of great value.

Literary Notes.

It may not be generally known to landsmen, but all sailors are aware that, with a strong and steady favoring wind, it is possible for a sailing-vessel to equal the speed of an Atlantic steamship. Mr. Benjamin, in his article on "The Evolution of the American Yacht" in the forthcoming July Century, compares the time made by some sailing-ships twenty and thirty years ago with that of the fastest steamers of to-day. In one of the recent "fastest passages ever made" by the Alaska, her greatest run was 419 miles in twenty-four hours. Before 1860, the ship James Baines, built by Donald McKay, ran 430 miles in twenty-four hours. The ship Red Jacket, built at Rockland, Maine, ran 2,280 miles in seven days, or 325 miles per diem for a week. The Flying Cloud, McKay's most celebrated ship, once made 374 knots, or 433 miles, in twenty-four hours and twenty-five minutes, equal to 17.37 miles per hour. The difficulty sailing vessels experience in competing with craft whose motive power is steam-lines, not in the ability of the ship, but in the fact that the wind is unsteady. Mr. Benjamin will accompany his magazine paper with a number of plans and diagrams, showing the shape of various sailing vessels and the gradual changes that have taken place in the construction of hulls since the days of the American "punk," invented for the cod-fisheries.

In the North American Review for July the leading article is a profound and sympathetic study of "Emerson as a Poet," by Edwin P. Whipple. The author has scarcely a word to say about forms and modes of expression, and cheerfully concedes that Emerson had command only of two or three meters; but he brings all the resources of his extraordinary critical acumen to prove that as a seer, as one who has intuition of the deeper truths of nature and the moral universe, in short, as a poet in the highest sense of the word, Emerson must take rank with the greatest geniuses of all time. In "Hydraulic Pressure in Wall Street," a writer who withholds his name, but who manifestly is no novice, exposes many of the tricks and devices by means of which fictitious values are created, and the unwary lured daily to ruin. Desire Charnay contributes the eleventh article in the series on "The Ruins of Central America." There are two papers on the civil-service question; one, "The Things Which Remain," by Gail Hamilton; the other, "The Business of Office-Seeking," by Richard Grant White. Finally, Francis Marion Crawford, son of the eminent American sculptor, writes of "False Taste in Art," and indicates certain directions in which art culture might be developed under the conditions of life existing in the United States.

Nathaniel Hawthorne, Thomas A. Edison, and Mark M. Pomeroy were all, at some period of their boyhood, amateur editors; and it is a well-known fact that a number of the successful journalists of the country began their editorial experience as boys with little two-penny newspapers of their own. Since the invention of the cheap hand-presses, the issue of these amateur journals has become one of the most popular recreations of young people. The July St. Nicholas will have a fully illustrated article, by Harlan H. Ballard, on amateur newspapers, giving a history of the rise and development of this new industry for young folks, and a sketch of the "National Amateur Press Association." Frank R. Stockton and Noah Brooks will be among the story-writers of this number, and there is said to be an unusually brilliant list of artists.

Among the attractive books recently published by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston, are the works of William Winter, including, besides his poems, the following volumes which he has edited, "The Life, Stories, and Poems of John Brougham," "Fitz-James O'Brien's Tales, Sketches, and Poems," and the "Poems by George Arnold." In the American Actor series first volumes are announced—viz., "Edwin Forrest," by Lawrence Barrett; "The Jeffersons," by William Winter; "The Elder and the Younger Booth," by Mrs. Asia Booth Clarke, and "Charlotte Cushman," by Mrs. Clara Erskine Clement.

As an evidence of the value which her publishers place upon her work, it may be stated that when Mrs. Dahlgren sent the manuscript of her "South Sea Sketches" to the Messrs. Osgood, she told them she had another book nearly ready. Without making any inquiry as to the nature or character of the work, they immediately wrote her accepting the book whenever it should be ready. "South Mountain Magic," which was noticed in THE REPUBLICAN last week was the result, and the book has already sold largely and the demand still continues.

The opening article in the July number of Harper's Bazaar is a very interesting study of the House of Commons. It is full of striking portraits of the English Parliamentary leaders, and affords a very interesting glimpse of the anatomy of English law-making. An interesting memoir of Franz Liszt, with a finely-engraved portrait, also appears in this number.

Magazines.

The July number of the Eclectic is at hand, and the number is an excellent one. It is illustrated with one of the finest steel engravings that has ever appeared in the magazine, entitled "Love's Confession," and this engraving alone is worth the price of the number. The table of contents is as follows: "A Word about America," by Matthew Arnold; "Charles Lamb and His Friends," by John Dennis; "Across the Yellow Sea;" "The Sun as a Perpetual Machine," by R. A. Proctor; "Wagner's 'Nibelung' and the Siegfried Tale," by Karl Blind; "Adrift," by May Probyn; "The Lady Maud," a sea tale, by the author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c.; "James and John Stuart Mill: Traditional and Personal Memorials," by J. S. Stuart-Glennie; "The Last King of Tahiti," by C. F. Gordon-Cumming; "Oiling the Waves: a Sequel to Tempest," by C. F. Gordon-Cumming; "What is There Left for Me to Say?" by Ethel de Fonblanque; "Three Great Dictionaries;" "The Story of a Block of Coal," by Professor A. H. Green; "A Day at Margate," by Margaret Lonsdale; "Thackeray as a Novelist;" "Elk-Hunting in Norway," by Clement Bunbury; "Poor White Trash;" "Tales of Books;" "Good-Morrow and Farewell;" Literary Notices; Foreign Literary Notes; Science and Art; and Miscellany.

The "Rand McNally Official Railway Guide," published by the National Railway Publication Company for June, 1882, comes to us through Hopkins Bros., 239 Pennsylvania avenue. It is filled with interesting information in reference to places of desirable interest for summer travel, and will be found of great value as a work of reference. There are maps showing the different railroad routes and tables of the time and departure of trains, the distances to prominent points, and the rates of fare.

Especial mention should be made of the valedictory address made by Miss Jessie H. Schutter, for aside from its merit as a composition it was delivered with a clearness of tone and distinctness of enunciation that is seldom heard. The numerous and numerous floral tributes that were showered upon Miss Schutter were the just tributes to her success in scholarship, and her beauty and amiability of disposition.

Rip Van Winkle.

The Wood River Gazette relates the following: "A St. Paul bacchanalian having on the day of the recent snowstorm imbibed too much of oh-be-joyful, retired to a hay loft of a livery stable to rest and sleep away the effects of the fiery potations of a few hours before. While he was enjoying to the best of his ability the comforts of a sobering-up nap, the weather changed suddenly and the snow came down thick and fast until it covered Howard County with a robe of pearly white. The snorings of the man of whisky continued during its duration and away until the orb of light had ushered in another day, when he arose and taking a yawning look at the snowy landscape exclaimed, "Great God, is it possible I have slept all summer.!"

Wisdom from Colorado.

Only those who favor continued Bourbon supremacy in Virginia oppose the Mahone movement. Good Republicans indorse almost anything that is calculated to harm that organization of evil, the Democracy.—Leadville Chronicle.

Address NATIONAL REPUBLICAN,
HALLET KILBOURN, MANAGER. Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., January 4, 1882.

To the Anti-Bourbon Voters of the Southern States:

The undersigned, Members of Congress from Southern States, desirous of promoting the union and cordial co-operation of all the anti-Bourbon elements in our section, in the good work of breaking up what has been a solid Bourbon South, heartily recommend that our constituents and friends do all in their power to extend the circulation of The Weekly National Republican.

Its political Editor, GEORGE C. GORHAM, has shown such power and judgment in his advocacy of liberalism in Virginia, that we want the benefit of his work in other Southern States. He has the true idea of the political situation at the South, and we are confident that his liberal counsels will do great good in producing good understandings between the Northern and Southern people, and friends of the Administration.

We hope to see The National Republican widely circulated throughout the entire South.

DEAR MR. KILBOURN:

It gives me pleasure to commend The National Republican—so well and ably edited—to the earnest friendship of those who would uphold the Constitution and the laws, discourage sectional lines and class legislation, foster public education, and respect the rights and care for the proper interests of all the people of a common country.

Yours truly,
WILLIAM MAHONE.

The Weekly National Republican is just what is needed in the South. Independent Democrats who refuse to act with the Bourbon organization will find it, as the Virginia Readjusters have, a fearless, outspoken, and judicious promoter of harmony and co-operation of all the anti-Bourbon elements at the South. I wish it success.

I recognize in the recent views and spirited tone of The National Republican, in its treatment of Southern politics, a broad, comprehensive, and patriotic statesmanship, and I believe that its circulation in Texas would materially aid liberal and progressive forces.
