THE amiable Columbia (S. C.) Register (Bourbon) thus kindly alludes to General Bragg, the Democratic member of Congress from Wisconsin:

The Wisconsin Democrats did themselves credit when they shelved this miserable snarling caricature on Democratic decency and manhood.

This matches the little urchins on the Irish coast, who begged from an American visitor all the loose change he had, and when he could not respond to the request for more told him he was "a domned old Yankee doodle."

THE Bourbon Democrats of Texas, in their party platform, declared in favor of free schools during ten months of the year instead of five, which has heretofore been the average. Now, the Galveston News says that it is delusive and impossible to have a longer term than three months. And this is the way with the Bourbons throughout the South. They claim to be in favor of free schools, and that it is their policy to build them up so that none may be prevented from obtaining a fair English education, and yet, in practice, they do everything in their power to cripple the system, and, so far as possible, render it inoperative. The Bourbons, as a class, are opposed to the education of the masses for the reason that as knowledge increases their power to control the people and carry out a rule-or-ruin policy is diminished.

North Carolina.

In North Carolina, as in Virginia, the Republican party is in alliance with the liberal elements of the State in opposition to the old moss-back Bourbon Democratic organization. In the North State, as in Virginia, Republicans are to be found who would rather aid Bourbons to victory than to labor with Liberal men of Democratic antecedents for their defeat. These wonderful specimens of Republicanism have no objections to the Democratic party nor to Bourbon Democrats. They concentrate all their hatred on the men with whose aid only they can ever hope to cure their States of the political malaria of Bourbonism. They seem to think that the South is not expected to contribute any electoral votes against a Bourbon restoration, but that it is to be simply a bed for the growth of National delegates and Federal officials. While fidelity to principle kept the friends of the Nation in a minority in the States referred to in this article, they were entitled to and received high praise from the Republicans of the North. But they who now refuse to obey the Republican organization in their own States when it commands affiliation with sound and true Union men, who have declared war upon the Bourbon party organization—they, who under the pretense of ultra Republicanism, aid in the perpetuation Bourbon rule—such men will find themselves hereafter without sympathy or affiliation with any Republicans in the North, except such as have for years been in favor with the Bourbon press, North and South. Mr. Dezendorf, of Virginia, has, it is reported in a New York paper, just been to New York for money. (From whom?) He is reported as saying that Blaine is tearing the Republican party down in New York and Pennsylvania, and that he will defeat the Virginia coalition. Then, says this astute Republican Bourbon, the cry will be for Blaine to lead the beaten party to victory. Great strategy. Sly Blaine. How the country would rise up for him. How the Republicans would rally around him if he is really the traitor his friend Dezendorf is represented as claiming him to be.

In North Carolina we are grieved to see that old Radical journal, the North State, and its proprietor, Colonel Thomas B. Keogh, given over to the same policy of aiding the Bourbons. It is a surrender. Colonel Keogh is said to be as bitter an enemy of coalition in Virginia, where there is no prohibition question, as in North Carolina. He has been prominent as a Grant Stalwart. He now exhibits symptoms of secondary Blaineism, in his preference for Bourbons who remain inflexible over those who decide to keep step to the music of the Union. His paper of the 21st ult., which we have but just seen, "ventures the opinion," that President Arthur is "true to the Republican party of North Carolina," and so he is, but not as the North State would have it appear. He is opposed to all Republicanism that aids the Bourbons in the face of a coalition unanimously indorsed by a Republican State convention. Republicans of North Carolina, beware of the leaven of Blaineism; beware of false guides. Your principles can never lead you to contribute to Bourbon tyranny.

How Blaine Carried Maine.

Was the victory in Maine a Stalwart or a Blaine boom? The Stalwarts claim it, though the country has by common agreement assigned the boom to Blaine.—Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser.

Answer: The long-continued leadership of Mr. Blaine in Maine created a revolt against "boss rule" several years ago. The feeling became very general that he had erected a "machine" which he used mainly for his own aggrandizement. This resulted in the defection of many Republicans, although the main body, of course, refused to leave the party under any such provocation. The Greenback movement was largely made up of these discontented Republicans, who were more disgusted with flat Republicanism than with flat money.

The fusion under Mr. Blaine's leadership between the Republicans and the Democrats in the legislature of 1878, whereby Garcelon, the bulldozer, was made governor, was not calculated to call back the wayward Republican Greenbackers. In 1880 Mr. Blaine had supreme command of the party in Maine. He was chairman of the State committee, and was backed up with all the material aid he desired from the National Committee and other sources. The party had been relieved of what his supporters claimed was an element of weakness, viz: the danger of a third-term candidate, and was buoyed up with what has been claimed by them to be irresistible, viz: Blaineism and Garfieldism combined. Mr. Blaine had every speaker he desired from abroad. With all these favoring gales, he ran the party ashore in September of that year, and created a panic which was felt nowhere more than in the home of the candidate at Mentor. Some said he wanted the party defeated. Unless this was a true explanation, then the disaster in Maine at the State election of September, 1880, was the supreme test of his power in that State, or rather the incontestible proof that he had lost his hold upon its people.

The only way for Mr. Blaine to have tested his strength in Maine in the late campaign would have been for him to have seemed a candidate for Mr. Frye's place. We believe this would have resulted in a repetition of the disaster of 1880. But he took good care to assure the people in his opening speech at Portland that Republican success meant the re-election of Mr. Frye to the Senate. This was a complete unloading of the party of the dead weight of Mr. Blaine's unpopularity. This does not make any the less true the statement heretofore made by THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN that the presence of Mr. Blaine and the speeches he made had a good effect upon his friends, while the knowledge that success would not promote him prevented any discontent among his enemies. As for his having "carried Maine," it is as absurd a pretension as was that of old Pete Morris that he had drawn the crowded house at a benefit given to the elder Booth. Old Pete Morris was a comic singer in the olden time, and the comic songsters were filled with songs "as sung by the renowned Pete Morris for a thousand nights amid unbounded applause." But Morris out lived his voice, his teeth, and his power to create mirth. Like other veterans who lag superfluous on the stage, he was wholly unconscious of having lost his prestige. Out of employment, and a dependent on the kindness of the actors of New Orleans, he volunteered to aid Mr. Booth, then in the zenith of his fame, by singing a song between the acts at a benefit. The polite old monarch of the stage graciously accepted the offer. On the night of the performance, the company being assembled on the stage previous to the rising of the curtain, old Pete looked through the "peek hole," and, seeing the immense crowd of Booth's admirers, which everybody knew would have been twice as large if the house would have permitted, returned to his companions, and pointing triumphantly to the front, said: "Oh, no! Pete Morris can't draw!" We leave the reader to make the application.

Mississippi Independentism.

The Oxford (Miss.) Falcon is a recognized organ of the Democracy, and the personal organ of Senator Lamar, at whose home it is published. Let those Northern Democrats who sneer at what they call the insignificance of Liberalism in the South read the following from its columns:

It is reported that Blair will run Independent against Muldrow, Roane against Money, and Niles against Singleton. This is not an encouraging outlook for the Democracy. Independentism in Mississippi heretofore has meant nothing, because the men who "went off" had no respectability to lend to the movement. But this year there is a difference that is not at all comfortable to consider. Those mentioned above as probable Independent candidates are men of talent, nerve, and respectability, and are not to be lightly considered or easily put aside, and while there is every probability of their defeat this year, the years to come hold much of danger to the Democratic party of Mississippi unless something is done to check the Independent movement that is making itself felt throughout the State. That there is something radically wrong is apparent to every thinking man, and that the success, even the life of the State Democracy depends upon the finding out of this wrong and correcting it, is equally as apparent. It is the acme of imbecility to ignore the outlook or to attempt to put it aside with a wave of the hand. It fronts the Democratic party of Mississippi as a live, healthy foe, and can only be overthrown and subjugated by honest knocks and fair, firm, and friendly discipline.

IT is Whitelaw Reid who claims the right to be the dictator in New York politics. He says that the Tribune told the President long ago that if he "interfered" it would "make the Nation tremble." Reid is as terrible a fellow as was Simon Tappertit. General Arthur is a New York Republican as well as the President of the United States. He is as respectable a man as Whitelaw Reid, and has an equal right to say who he thinks the best man for governor in New York. Why not? The sneaks are evidently only addressing their absurdities to fools and malignants.

THAT rancid fraud and unblushing political bawd, Bill Woodin, of New York, is against Folger. Of course he is. And so are all of his kind. Lo Sessions, his first lieutenant, is doubtless with him, but is singing small just now because he is under indictment for attempting to bribe a member of the legislature to vote against Conkling and "bad methods."

How Mrs. Stowe Appeared.

Mrs. Stowe, of San Francisco, appeared in trousers before the Social Science Sisterhood the other day. The Call says: "Her hair was cut short and bound up with a narrow ribbon. She wore a black velvet coat-tailed basque and a short black silk plaited skirt. The 'line of beauty' was concealed by black cassimere trousers covering the instep. Her gaiters were of cloth, and on her breast was a red silk badge stamped 'S. S. S.,' and fastened with a diamond pin and two artificial roses. She carried a fan. 'I have a double row of flannels on under my dress, and no corsets,' she explained. 'I never wore corsets in my life.'"

BLAINE'S LOGIC.

What a West Virginia Paper Has to Say of the Scaling Policy.

If Mr. Blaine's position regarding the Virginia debt is followed out to its logical results it would place that versatile statesman in a very anomalous position. Perhaps Mr. Blaine is now in favor of paying the Southern debt, or at least of compensating Southern States for the ravages of the rebellion, but that involves a great tumble from his past attitude toward the South. Yet how can Mr. Blaine consistently escape this position and be impartial in the policy which he proposes to apply to the State of Virginia? We understand him to maintain that Virginia should not be charged with the payment of her debt—that, indeed, the Federal government is in duty bound to come to her relief—because forsooth, her territory happened to be the great battle-ground of the rebellion, and she

BORE THE BRUNT OF THE WAR.

But before Virginia became the battle-ground of the rebellion she had seceded from the Federal Union, and she became the battle-ground chiefly because of that act of secession, and her territory was devastated in the act and by her effort to sustain the rebellion of her confederates against the Federal government. Virginia was not much worse pillaged and plundered in the north than was Georgia on the south. If Virginia bore the brunt of the war with Grant at so did Georgia bear the brunt with Sherman at the other end. Both States were fighting for the same cause, and both sustained the consequent devastation by the Federal soldiery in support of a common end. If, therefore, Virginia is to be reimbursed by the Federal government, why not Georgia? Why not other or all the southern States? If Mr. Blaine's logic is good as to Virginia we can see no reason why other States of the confederacy that have been impoverished by the war, may not file their claims against the Federal government for relief.—Wheeling (W. Va.) Register.

ONE END OF THE CONFEDERACY,

A Good Indication.

The following from the New York Times of yesterday taken in connection with the absence of unfriendliness in any other portion of the same issue, seems to indicate a disposition on the part of that journal to support Judge Folger:

The intemperate wing of the temperance reformers is hard to please. Its organ complains that Secretary Folger does not, in his elucidatory comments on the Saratoga platform, "even remotely allude to the liquor traffic or a prohibitory constitutional amendment," and, jumping to the conclusion that the Republican candidate "deliberately ignores" the call for that amendment, the organ recommends temperance voters to ignore him on election day. The Temperance Advocate seems to forget that Mr. Folger expresses himself as "in full accord" with the resolutions of the convention, which, as it admits, did favor the submission of the amendment, and it also forgets that this may have been one of the few resolutions which Mr. Folger did not think needed any comment. The Democratic convention studiously ignored the subject, and its candidate will doubtless follow its example. Do the temperance leaders propose to support the party of free rum merely because the Republican candidate for governor left one of the resolutions of his party platform to speak for itself? It is not probable that their opposition will materially affect the prospects of the Republican ticket, but whatever may be its strength it is certainly the least reasonable of all the influences working against the success of the Republican ticket.

Ayres as a Republican.

The efforts of certain Golden Belt newspapers to write up E. W. Ayres as a Republican are regarded as very ridiculous here in Washington where the political status of that gentleman is too well known to admit of any prevarication. If the assignment of the Ayres family to such choice seats at the Republican banquet needs any defense, and it seems to be judging from the nervousness exhibited by the aforesaid newspapers, why not put it on the ground that stopping the mouth of a blatant Bourbon with government pap is better than having the camp eternally disturbed with the uproar inspired by his hungry maw? And then, does not the law creating these places in the Agricultural Department specially provide that they shall be filled without respect to the politics of the appointees? Why was not that thought of it?—Washington correspondence Leavenworth Times.

Dana's Tribute to Grant.

Charles A. Dana, ex-Assistant Secretary of War, and editor of the New York Sun, who is a bitter enemy of General Grant, pays the following tribute to one trait of his character: General Grant never swears. In all our acquaintance with him we never heard him utter a profane word. His example in this respect was as consistent as it was conspicuous. Most army officers will swear when they are excited. General Scott used to swear. General Sheridan will put in an oath now and then to emphasize his ideas, and General Sherman can make the air lurid with his cursing. Not so with General Grant. We have been with him in some of the most trying circumstances of his military career, and can testify that no cause of anxiety or of anger has ever drawn any sort of an oath from his lips.

An Advertisement for Mr. Langtry.

When Mr. Booth was recently playing an engagement at the Adelphi, in London, the Prince and Princess of Wales one evening occupied a box. At the close of the performance the Prince sent Lord Colville of Culross, his lord in waiting, to invite Mr. Booth to the box. Mr. Booth naturally supposed that the Prince had sent for him to compliment him on his performance, but as he entered his discomfiture may be imagined when the Prince, coming forward and greeting him cordially, said: "Mr. Booth, I have sent for you to ask you how do you think Mrs. Langtry will succeed in America?"

When! How's This?

In the prospectus of a Kentucky "college" for young women is the following: "The president is Southern by birth, by rearing, by education, and by sentiment; the teachers are all Southern in sentiment, and, with the exception of those born in Europe, were born and reared in the South. Believing the Southern to be the highest type of civilization this continent has seen, the young ladies are trained according to the Southern ideas of delicacy, womanhood, religion, and propriety; hence we offer a first-class female college for the South, and solicit Southern patronage."

An Opinion Worth Nothing.

Ex-President Hayes is in town on private business. To political friends he is said to express himself without constraint with reference to the existing complications in the Republican party in this State. He thinks the leaders have made a bad business of it, and that, if it be true that the Administration is at the bottom of it, the Administration itself will soon be at the bottom. He has a high regard for Judge Folger, but thinks he is a victim of an unfortunate concurrence of infelicitous circumstances.—New York Letter.

An Egg Story.

A hen in Connecticut laid an egg the other day, on the shell of which was distinctly traced the figures 1885. The object of her laying her egg so far in advance is puzzling the people of that State, and it is proposed to submit the problem to Herbert Spencer, the English philosopher. Our theory is that the hen is a printer, and got her fingers in the wrong box. Printers frequently get a font used of a 2.—Norristown Herald.

PERSONALITIES.

General J. R. Anderson, of Richmond, has quarters at the Ebbitt.

Senator David Davis exercises with twenty-five pound dumb-bells.

Captain John Mullan, of this city, reached San Francisco last week.

Secretary Folger's son, who is in Minnesota, is lying at the point of death.

General Braxton Bragg, now of Mobile, Ala., is at the Ebbitt House, where he arrived yesterday.

Nathan A. C. Smith, Esq., of the Post-Office Department, and Mrs. Smith, were in St. Paul, Minn., on Sunday.

Winfield Scott Bird, esq., United States consul at Laguayra, is in the city. No better specimen of southern manhood can be found.

William Young, who is 93 years of age, won a wrestling match and ran a mile in five minutes one day recently at an Illinois county fair.

Dr. MacKenzie, a distinguished throat specialist, of London, England, is now in the city, and, with the aid of Dr. Carroll Morgan, is visiting all places of interest.

Senator Thurman said in his recent speech at Cincinnati, "I will stand by and defend the river and harbor bill, for every cent of the money used under that appropriation will be honestly spent."

Captain Frank H. Barnhart, lieutenant Eighteenth infantry, who was at the Ebbitt House yesterday, has been granted five months' extension of the leave granted him by General Terry. He is on his way to Atlanta to join his wife, and left yesterday.

Alexander Doyle, a New Orleans sculptor, has completed a model for a statue of General Robert E. Lee to crown the monumental shaft in Lee Place, in that city. It represents the confederate chieftain standing, in his ordinary military dress, and is said to be an excellent likeness. The statue will be about three times larger than life-size.

THE HISTORY OF LIFE.

I saw an infant in its mother's arms
And left it sleeping.

Years passed—I saw a girl with woman's charms
In sorrow weeping.

Years passed—I saw a mother with her child,
And o'er it languish.

Years brought me back—yet through her tears she smiled
In deeper anguish.

I left her—years had vanished—I returned,
And stood before her;
A lamp beside the childless widow burned,
Grief's mantle o'er her.

In tears I found her whom I left in tears,
On God relying;
And I returned in after years,
And found her dying.

An infant first, and then a maiden fair—
A wife, a mother—
And then a childless widow in despair—
Thus met a brother.

And thus we meet on earth, and thus we part,
To meet, oh, never!
Till death beholds the spirit leave the heart,
To live forever.
