"REFORM'S" RECORD.

WHAT THE DEMOCRATS, WHO PROMISE SO MUCH, ACTUALLY DID WHEN IN POWER.

Stealing $20,000,000 Out of Less Than One-Third the Revenue of To-Day—A List of Their Principal Delinquents and Defaulters—Allowed to Escape with Their Plunder, with No Effort to Make Them Disgorge.

The campaign cry of the democratic party is "Reform." Democrats are clamoring loudly for "honest men in office." "Turn the rascals out" shrieks every campaign orator from the stump, and the general demand of every campaign document and poster is for change—anything but what is, so long as the democratic party is given control of the government. It is well, therefore, to examine the record and see what sort of "reform" the democratic party is anxious to give us; what they mean by honest men in office and the kind of rascals they will put in when they turn the alleged rascals out, and the best possible evidence of what they will do is to be found in what they have done.

In 1828 Andrew Jackson, the great hero and patron saint of democracy, was elected president, and since that time his name has been sacred to the party, and his picture has held the place of honor in every national convention of that party. He formulated and gave life to the great democratic principle, "to the victors belong the spoils," and in pursuance of it began a wholesale turning out of office-holders of all grades and in all places. In the forty years preceding his inauguration there had been only 132 changes in the employes of the government. His predecessor, John Quincy Adams, had made but twelve changes, and all for cause. But Jackson, during the first year of his administration, made nearly 1,500 changes, or about twelve times as many as all his predecessors together. The places of those dismissed were invariably filled by democrats, who, according to the great democratic idea of that day and this, were "entitled to the spoils," when victorious at the polls. Thus did Andrew Jackson and his party work "reform" in that day, and the result can be best shown by the record they left behind them in the ledgers of the treasury department during their thirty years of power. By their marks ye shall know them, and by their record let them be judged.

During the first two years of his first administration President Jackson was busy putting his great spoil. doctrine into operation, and in the nature of things it is fair to assume that in that time he got the administration of public affairs in all the departments and public offices everywhere into the hands of democrats. We shall not, therefore, hold his party responsible for a single fault chargeable to his predecessor if we begin the examination with the year 1830. At that time the revenues of the country were small compared with what they are now, but the record shows that the spoils system was easy to understand, and the stealing soon came to be large. During the four years of John Quincy Adams's administration the total amount involved in revenue collected and disbursed was $201,488,077.20, and the total loss was $883,374.04, or $4.39 per $1,000. In Jackson's eight years the total amount involved—collections and disbursements—was $500,081,747.75; the total loss $3,761,111.87, or $7.52 per $1,000, and at no time during democratic rule did the loss fall below $4 per thousand until Pierce came in, when it fell to $3.56. At no time under republican administrations, not even during the unsettled period of the war, has the rate of loss exceeded 76 cents per $1,000, and even this has been gradually reduced, until now under President Arthur it is about one and eight-tenth mills. Prior to June 30, 1861, when the first republican secretary of the treasury made his annual report the total amount involved in collections and disbursements for the whole country had amounted to $4,719,481,157.63, and of this amount $24,441,829.32, or $5.21 out of every $1,000, had been stolen by dishonest officials. Since that time, and down to June 30, 1883, the date of the latest report made by Secretary Folger, the total amount involved in collections and disbursements has been $36,767,851,781.48, of which $14,497,137.42, or only 39 cents in every $1,000, has not been accounted for, and for the recovery of a large part of this amount suits are now pending.

Now for the detailed record of the democratic rascality while in power. THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN has had compiled from the ledgers of the treasury department the following list of democratic defaulters and delinquents, whose defalcations amounted to more than $10,000, no account being taken of smaller sums, of which there is no lack. As above stated, in order that no injustice may be done, the record begins with the year 1830, by which time President Jackson may fairly be presumed to have got his great democratic spoils system fairly in operation. The record covers the period from that date to 1861, when President Lincoln was inaugurated.
