TWO KILLED OUTRIGHT

Wreck on Santa Fe at Flynn

Engineer Vanscoter and Brakeman Rosebrough Dead—Cars Derailed.

Special to the Daily Leader.

Oklahoma City, September [illegible]—A broken switch at the north end of the Santa Fe siding at the station of Flynn, five miles north of this city, caused a wreck on the main line last night at 8:10 o'clock. Engineer Jim Vanscoter and head brakeman Rosebrough were killed outright, while the engine and nine cars of the train were heaped together in a total wreck obstructing the main line for several hours. It was extra No. 910 and was in charge of Conductor Mullinahey. The train was traveling at the ordinary rate of speed. When the crash came Conductor Mullinahey was in his way car and knowing something had happened he rushed forward. There he found the engine on its side and under it lay Engineer Vanscoter, his head on one side of the rail and his entire body under the engine. His neck was broken, his breast crushed and his legs broken. The escaping steam and hot water had scalded and cooked the flesh. Head brakeman Rosebrough was found under the tank mashed flat.

Fireman Jumped From Cab.

Fireman McDonald escaped in a miraculous manner, although bruised, cut and shaken up. He was found hanging on the engine steps by Conductor Mullinahey to a shocked condition. McDonald says when he felt the engine going over he jumped from the window of the cab. That man will be more alone it.

The wrecking crew at Arkansas City was dispatched to the wreck and did opening work of the [illegible] was removed. A crew of train men worked most of the night laying a track around the wreck and the line is open. Northern passenger No. 101 was late at [illegible] was detained ten hours.

It was first thought that an open switch was the cause of the disaster, but the investigation by the wreckers seem inclined to believe that the switch was broken in some way and had slipped upon uncovering the engine.
