PICTURE PLAY PREACHES PREPAREDNESS

"The Battle Cry of Peace" the gigantic photo dramatic spectacle in which J. Stuart Blackton, head of the Vitagraph company, presents the distinguished American actor, Charles Richman, in the most vital, gripping and momentous screen drama ever produced, is remarkable for the fact that it proves that military and naval preparedness against a possible foe is not necessarily that bugaboo of the cracker box politician, "militarism."

"The Battle Cry of Peace" tells the story of a young New York idealist man who, going to a lecture on preparedness given by Hudson Maxim, the well known inventor, is greatly impressed by what he hears and becomes convinced that his country's lack of preparation against war is a great and ever present menace to the peace and happiness of the people.

Judge Cotteral's Lecture on Booze a Gem

Wichita, May 11.—I have heard numerous lectures from the bench to erring boys and wayward girls, to hardened criminals and beginners in the art of crime, but it has very seldom been my pleasure to be present at such a short, crisp, nearly talk to the offender against the law as that given by Judge John H. Cotteral in the federal court of Oklahoma just before he sentenced a Indian named George Hood.

Samuel J. Pierson, an attorney of Wichita, who was in the court at the time of the incident mentioned, was the speaker.

Hood was given a fine of $100 and a jail sentence of sixty days for selling liquor to the Osage Indians.

"The trouble with the average liquor man," said Judge Cotteral, "is that he should be ashamed of his business. He is not ashamed of it. He sells liquor to the young man or works at other jobs which upset his families. It is certain to ruin someone. It contaminates everything it touches.

"You look like a young man of good training and good family connections. You have had unmounted opportunities to make something of yourself; but evidently you have disregarded them all, have thrown them aside as mere trifles.

"I throw myself upon the mercy of the court, your honor," said the young man.

"For that reason and because I like your looks, I am going to be merciful to you," continued Judge Cotteral, "on your personal pledge that henceforth you will lead an upright and useful life and try to regain some of the opportunities you have thrown away."

"I will, judge, I will," said Hood.
