Port of Kirkwall, Ersrtwhile a Rather Obscure Scotch Town, Borrows Brief Fame

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Kirkwall, where many of the American, navy and army ships have been taken for examination by the British patent office, has been said to have made its entrance into fame—so far as the average Londoner is concerned—only on pages of the street American ...

Probably few Londoners were ... regarded the existence of Kirkwall until they read about it in the ... war note. It is a rather ... Scotch town, although capital of the island county of Orkney, and it ... within a less than four thousand ... It has a magnificent harbor ... which the 250 or so capital ships might all find safety in, and in ... some time. But when it is ... heard that Kirkwall is located ... miles north of John o' Groats, which is the extreme northern point of ... land, it is seen how far the ... from the ordinary purposes ...

The American navy ... a better harbor in which to spend ... Christmas cheer not before sight ... of the antipodean order. The ... navy is enriched by the past ... Pict, palace and castle are all of ... Middle age, and nearly are ... Stonehenge circles of ... no more ... Nowhere are the ... remains better preserved. Reminders of Scandinavian rule are found in the place names, Kirkwall itself being a corruption of Kirkjuvagr, the "Bay of the Church."

The first of the brilliant galaxy of holiday dances of the season was that given Tuesday evening at the Lee-Huckins by Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Cotteingham in honor of their daughter, Miss Madeline Cottingham, who is home from school at Manitowoc, N. Y., for a fortnight. Christmas bells and greenery decorated the ball room, augmented in the dining room by flowers and holly and mistletoe and punch was served here throughout the evening from a flower decked table.

A feature of the evening was the novelty of the refreshments. At 12 o'clock the guests were invited to the mezzanine of the hotel where a typical country breakfast was served from tables decorated attractively with potted plants, dancing being resumed between courses. The chaperones of the occasion who assisted Mr. and Mrs. Cottingham were Judge and Mrs. Charles B. Ames, Judge and Mrs. Samuel W. Hayes, Messrs. and Mmes. S. M. A dainty color scheme of pink, white and blue was carried out in all the appointments, the table having for its central adornment a silver candelabra, with pink shaded tapers, entwined with smilax which was gracefully festooned over the cloth. At either corner were lovely French blue baskets filled with Killarney roses and tied with butterfly bows of pink tulle. The place cards and nut dishes were pink and blue figurines.
