SPRINTER MUST REST YEAR

Howard Drew, the former champion sprinter, claims that a sprinter needs a good season's rest after many years of active competition on the track, and then he might be able to come back to form and run faster than ever in his specialty. This has been the colored sprinter's case, and many followers of the sport will await how the idea applies when he endeavors to speed up in the meets of the future in which he will participate.

Carlisle Indians have abolished football. What's the matter, Jr. Buffalo Bill, getting all the husky Redskins?
