DUVAL COUNTY.

Close of the Fiesta—Sale of Goods and other Property—Dots from Diego.

Correspondence of the Gazette.

San Diego, November 5.—Having been absent some days from our little city in the woods, and but recently returned, I cannot give you much news of what is going on here. The fair or fiesta as the Mexicans call it, which was still going on when I left, had come to an end, and the night after my return home, walking through the plaza, instead of the gay and festive scene which it represented at my going away I found it sombre, dark and dreary. I could not but repeat the lines:

"I feel like one who treads alone some banquet hall deserted, Whose lights have fled, whose garlands dead and all but me departed."

"A change came o'er the spirit of my dream;" no longer the merry laugh of the gay youth was to be heard or the graceful form of the pleasure-loving senorita to be seen upon the plaza. San Diego had come down to the usual routine of daily life once more. While I was at Benavides I attended the sheriff's sale of all the perishable property of the late firm of Toklas & Co. This firm, which consisted of J. W. Toklas and H. Maas, had during the life of Maas been doing a prosperous and extensive business. Maas, who was well liked and esteemed by all who knew him, had the confidence of the people, and drove a rousing trade, but he was brutally murdered last July, and since that time the concern has been running down. Toklas, who did the gas work principally, tried to bore with too big an auger, could not make it turn, consequently the creditors have brought him up with a round turn by attachment on the store in Benavides, and one which he had started in Burnet. The goods at Benavides were mostly sold at a great sacrifice, being auctioned off in large lots, so that only those in the mercantile business could bid. There were some thirty-three head of horse stock also levied on and sold at $6.50 per head. I think $6.50 pretty low for good young stock. The establishment formerly carried on by Toklas & Co. will now be carried on by Davidson & Sterling, who have a fair prospect of doing a good business at the old stand. The only other store at Benavides is kept by Mr. A E. Glover, who does a good trade. Benavides, however, is a growing place, and being in the heart of the wool-growing section of the county, could maintain two or three more stores, a blacksmith and wheelright shops and other industries which for the present it has not the benefit of, but which will in all probability be found there in the near future.

Our town is somewhat dull just now. The most of the wool producers are shipping their fleeces to the Northern markets, not liking the low prices which are offered here.

Pat Whelan, the energetic sheriff of Nueces county, was here last Saturday. He took with him to Corpus Christi in the train one of our jail birds, who through the wise (?) decision of our local magistrate, had been put in the wrong cage. Capt. Whelan is not only a first-rate officer, but he is a gentlemanly and clever man.

The old Mexican whom I wrote to you about some time back, having been run over by a cart and having his leg fractured and the foot of the other terribly crushed, under the skillful treatment of Dr. Kupfer has entirely recovered. This may be considered a miraculous cure of a man 80 years old with a compound fracture in one leg, and mortification setting in the other foot, and restored to health with only the loss of one toe.

Butler Bobs Up.

Boston, November 8.—The Herald states that Governor Butler told a member of his council he should run for governor next fall. The compliment of 150,000 votes leads him to think he will be successful.

A Damage Suit.

Cincinnati, November 8. — Judge Harman of the superior court, in a suit for damages against the owners of a building where several employes of Dreman's rag ware-house lost their lives, decided that the proprietor of the ware-house and not the owner of the building is liable for damages.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Philosophy of an Old Admiral and Ingersoll's Fury.

How Negrophily Destroyed the Republican Party in the Sixth.

The Y. M. C. A. and Freedman's Bank—Personal Notes.

By Mail and Telegraph.

Washington, November 8.—Admiral Carter, an East Tennesseean by birth, but of the United States navy from his boyhood, is one of the most agreeable and admirable gentlemen one encounters in Washington. In honor of his father's fame and virtues the extreme Northeastern county of Tennessee was named; a fact made familiar in local political campaigns when the "slangwhanging" stump orators exclaim, "I have borne the banner of Democracy, never trailing it in the dust, from Carter to Shelby" and then the boys do "holler." Shelby, you must know, is the extreme southwestern county of the state, 125 miles wide by 500 in length. In physical geography Tennessee looks like a "see-saw," its center resting on the Cumberland mountains, with Memphis on one and Knoxville on the other end, and it is this balancing process which I imagine keeps the politics of the state level. In the olden time, before our Noachial deluge of crimes and griefs, the Whig and Democratic parties were constantly alternating as masters of Tennessee, and if stupid malevolence—such as Ingersoll illustrated in recent speeches on the nullification of the civil-rights act—had not governed the Republican party, Tennessee today would be anti-Democratic by a majority equal to the whole number of negro voters in the state.

HOW A PARTY FATALLY BLUNDERED.

In no state was the hostility of Democrats towards Whigs and Douglas men so bitter as in Tennessee. For several years after peace these distinctions were maintained and the newspapers recognized it by denominating opponents of the Bob Ingersolls and Thad Stevens of the period, the "Democratic and Conservative party," the latter adjective having reference to followers of Bell and Douglas.

But fierce fanaticism won the day, and Stevens and Butler and Ingersoll, and the many madmen like them, drove every white man of the South into the ranks of the detested Democracy—in fact, the party of grand moral ideas could not afford to coalesce with the old Whigs and Union men of the South. It happened that these were the slaveholders of the South and radicalism was based on hatred of martyrs rather than love for slaves, and per force, the Republican party was driven to an organization of an exclusively negro party in the South. Ben Butler co-operated properly and wisely in effecting this result. His purpose was, though he was then a supposed stalwart Republican, to make the South solidly Democratic.

He triumphed. He gave the negroes to Thad Stephens, turned the white people over solidly to the Democracy and then he himself flopped, and became a Democrat that he might reign in Massachusetts, and, possibly, in the White House.

"IT IS TILDEN OR BUTLER."

But most marvelous of all miracles is this, that if Butler be president he will have the solid support of the negroes. Ingersoll and even Fred Douglass may interpose, but in vain. If Butler were the Democratic candidate, of a truth would we have a solid South.

All this came of a brief conversation with the vigorous, burly old Tennesseean, Admiral Carter, the soundest of Democrats, venerating all that is good and great in the history of the commonwealth, whose heroes and statesmen, Jackson, White, Polk, Houston and Davy Crockett and man like them he never ceases to extol.

SAD FACTS.

Ingersoll pays, or the colored people for him, $100 each evening for the hall in which he inveighs against vices of person and character inherent in ex-slaveholders and their sons. He is said to be an honest, truthful, generous gentleman, and I am persuaded that he is. He has suffered his strong native philanthropic impulses to make him oblivious of facts. Like the Republican of this city, he deems the six ignorant brutes who, as kuklux, whipped and perhaps killed a few negroes in Georgia, and were properly punished by a Southern court, jury and prosecutor, representative Southern white men, and especially are they murderous products of the institution of slavery. Never a day passes that the Republicans and Ingersoll do not tear their hair and weep over these negroes and Chisholm and sweet Elias Pinkston, always oblivious, however, of Tewksbury tanneries.

If there had been no civil rights law and no reconstruction, whose purpose it was to array the races against one another, there would never have been a kuklux. The ignorant of the working people of the South were exasperated that congress sought to force upon them social and personal equality with the negro. The negro, too, was misled. He refused to give half the sidewalk. He thrust women into the gutter. Everywhere in the South this happened. But the imbittered toiling white man resented the attempt of distant power to make him a negro. Race enmity was generated between this class and the blacks, and by Ingersoll's cherished code now happily annulled. Then, too, let Mr. Ingersoll remember that when he denounces "negro murderers" in the South he never denounces a slave-holder and his sons. The law pronounced void, with this class, was always void. They cared nothing
