JUDGE DEAN recently rendered a decision in the Courts of Blair county that is of considerable importance. The point decided is that the signatures of the makers of a note executed in pencil and afterward inked over by a third party to preserve the signatures are "material alterations" and therefore void.

IN the Court news of last week the type are made to say that our friend H. H. Goucher, Esq., was the bail on a forfeited recognizance of J. H. Bowman, Esq. The bail was Geo. H. THE new passenger cars on the Pennsylvania railroad have some new features that render them much more convenient than any yet built by other companies. They each have a small retiring room in which is a sofa, stationary washstand, etc., which enables a traveler, who has not the means or inclination to travel in a Pullman coach, to make his toilet before leaving the train, which is often a great convenience.

AT a recent meeting of the American Academy of Medicine in Baltimore some interesting statistics bearing upon the medical profession were exhibited. Among them was a table showing that we have one doctor to every one hundred families in the United States, and this statement is made upon the basis of a full understanding that "a majority of them are ignorant and unfit for their business." And we are also told that the doctors assembled did not dispute the truth of the assertion.

PRUDENT people always have Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills convenient. They often take the place of a doctor and cost only 25 cts. For sale everywhere.

"I do not wish to buy any goods to-day" said a gentleman in Ritter & Ralston's last Saturday. After looking at your goods and prices I understand all about it. Good goods at low prices are bound to draw the people."

Two Mercer county neighbors are trying to settle, to their own satisfaction at least, that old disputed point as to who should have the fruit from an overhanging bough. Wm. Packard's lot has a peach tree growing on it near the line fence between himself and Wm. Heatly, the limbs of which extend over the lot of the latter. Heatly removed the fruit from the overhanging limbs and Packard had him arrested. Refusing to give bail he was committed, and the case will probably come up for trial next Court.

AFTER a second trial, Martin H. Turner, of Clearfield county, was acquitted lately of the charge of murder. Turner was a section boss on the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1875, when, it is alleged, he enticed a woman to the woods and killed her, after he had persuaded her on a previous occasion to desert her husband. He was found guilty and sentenced to be hung at the first trial, but the case was carried to the Supreme Court, and a new trial was granted, which, with a change of venue took place in Clinton county.

MR. WM. CROOKS, F. R. S., talked to the British Association at its recent annual meeting about the almost infinite smallness of the ultimate particles of matter. A small bulb which he showed them contained 1,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 (a quadrillion) molecules of air. If the air were exhausted from the bulb so that only a millionth of the quantity was left, the bulb would still contain a trillion molecules. Suppose that these trillion molecules were out of the bulb. How long would it take for them to get into it through a hole large enough to admit a hundred millions of them every second? "An hour! A day! A century? Nay, almost an eternity."

THE Germantown Telegraph says that the last new plan for raising wheat is to sow one quart of oats to two of wheat, so that when the frost nips the oats, it falls and acts as a cover to mulch for the wheat. On a trial it is asserted that the crop of wheat was excellent, while in an adjoining field where the old mode was followed, it was very poor. The fact is that the former crop of wheat was so well cultivated, that it proved to be a good crop in spite of the oats, not on account of it. Winter wheat requires no cover, and if it did, it would hardly be benefitted in the result by the oats eating up one-half the fertilization of the soil." We think some account should be taken of what the oats leave, roots and stems return to the soil.

WE find the following piece of information for farmers going the rounds of our exchanges: The fertilizing law of Pennsylvania went into effect on the first day of August. It provides that any package of any commercial fertilizer sold in the State shall contain on its outside a statement of the amount of nitrogen, phosphoric acid (soluble and reverted), and potash which it contains; fixes the amount of license to be paid for the privilege of sale ($10 for 100 tons, $20 for more than 100 and less than 500), the money obtained from these licenses to be placed as a fund from which to defray the expenses of analyzing commercial fertilizers under the direction of the Board of Agriculture. The penalty for selling commercial fertilizers which has not been analyzed, as provided by law, is from $25 to $200, according to the nature of the offense.

HON. WARREN J. WOODWARD, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, died of consumption at Hampden, Delaware county, N. Y., on the 23rd ult. Judge Woodward was born in Bethany in 1820. Removing to Wilkesbarre, he was then admitted to the bar in 1842 and remained in practice until 1856. Columbia, Sullivan and Wyoming counties being then erected into a separate Judicial district by the Legislature, Gov. Pollock appointed Mr. Woodward President Judge upon the unanimous recommendations of the people of the district, and in October of the same year he was unanimously elected. In 1861 he was elected by a large majority President Judge of the Berks district. After serving ten years he was unanimously renominated in 1871 without opposition and elected by the Democratic party by another large majority. He remained on the bench of Berks until 1874, when he received the Democratic nomination for the Supreme Court, Judge Paxson was the Republican nominee, and under the system of voting established by the new Constitution, both were elected. Judge Woodward's health had been failing for some time previous to his death.

ALL men must be interested in a question which has been raised among the Methodists since the death of Daniel Drew, whose figure was so long and well known in New York. The question is whether a sharp stock speculator, or, in other words, a stock gambler, can be a Christian. That Mr. Drew was a very shrewd and daring operator in stocks we all know. Not many years ago he was one of the richest operators in Wall street and in the country, and he had gathered his great fortune by manipulating stocks for a rise or a fall. What they were really worth, whether the corporations which issued them were managed for the public benefit or only in the interests of a ring of speculators, were matters about which he didn't concern himself. All he thought of was their use to him in making money. So feeling, he was not unlike stock speculators in general, who do not pretend that they are playing the part of unselfish public benefactors. They are simply trying to make as much money as they can, and even if their purses are filled by the depletion of those of their neighbors, they sleep with consciences which make them no trouble, and rejoice at their prosperity.

PRIDE of birth and pride of home were seated firmly on their thrones in the Van Ness mansion sixty years ago when Congressman Van Ness, a Dutch Knickerbocker, came to Washington and built a grand residence on the banks of the Potomac for the reception and home of his bride, Marcia Burns, at whose feet Lafayette had knelt in vain as a suppliant lover, and whose hand was kissed by Aaron Burr in homage and adoration, and Tom Moore when he was in America in 1805 wrote a sonnet to her eyebrow. The years rolled on in elegant state and hospitable entertainment within the Walls of the Van Ness house, and finally master and mistress passed the way of all mortals, leaving no children behind them to transmit their name, and so the property passed into the hands of relatives, who by their bad management and unthrift soon reduced the princely estate to ruin, and to-day the old house stands in decay, moss-grown and storm-beaten, occupied as a beer garden by the colored citizens of the Capital, and a negro brass band plays there throughout the hot nights on the same floor where a few decades ago the solemn, stately measures of the minuet were trodden by George Washington and his courtly successors.

AN old swindle, with new variations, is now being worked among the farmers of Wayne county. An "agent" comes along with a wagon load of metallic rods, and interviews the farmer on the subject of lightning. Perhaps the farmer has heard of lightning-rod men, and doesn't care about dealing with them. In such a contingency, the agent is not a man of that description at all, but is in an entirely different business; he merely furnishes "protection against lightning" in a perfectly safe and honest manner. The "company" for which he is operating puts up lightning rods, but without asking a man to buy them. They just compute the interest on the cost of the rod, and for the yearly payment of that amount the "company" insure the building, and pay the loss if it is struck by lightning. The cost of the rod is estimated at any convenient sum—from fifty to seventy-five cents a foot—and the quantity required at from twenty-five to forty feet; and the interest on the price is computed at seventy-five cents to $1.50 a year. If the farmer can be beguiled into giving his assent, the rod is forthwith clapped on. Then the "documents" are produced, and the band begins to play. On measuring the rod used, there is found to be from a hundred to a hundred and fifty feet, and the "interest," when computed, is three or four times the amount originally stated. If the farmer asks why this is thus, he is told that his building is an unusually large one, and takes a great deal more rod than had been expected. If convinced that everything is right, the "agent" fills out a "policy" of insurance, and a very innocent looking document for the farmer to sign, ostensibly for the payment of the annual "interest," with some conditions which have the effect of making him liable for the price of the rod. When too late, the farmer finds he has bought the rod and agreed to pay for it. If he demurs to the amount of the "interest," as computed, and cannot be wheedled into proceeding further, the "agent" tries the effect of bulldozing. He alleges that the farmer is liable for the price of the rod, and threatens a lawsuit at Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Erie, or some other remote point. If this game does not succeed, he next offers to "compromise," and take a reduced price for the rod, "rather than have any litigation about it." If the farmer yields, he finds himself on the worst side of a very bad bargain. The only safe way of dealing with traveling sharps is to deal not at all. The man who takes the chances of dealing with them should take the precaution of having some witness present, so that they cannot outswear him; he should be firm in holding them to their original terms, and he should be exceedingly careful what he signs, if sign he must and will. If a controversy arises, their threats to sue in a distant county may be treated with contempt. If the contracting sharps are aliens, or citizens of another State, and the matter in controversy exceeds $500, a suit may be brought in the U. S. Circuit Court at Philadelphia; otherwise it must be brought in the county where the defendant lives. But such parties seldom sue until after they have obtained their victim's signature to something. —Honesdale Citizen.

Reunion of 11th Reg't Pa. Reserves.

On Thursday, Sept. 25, 1879, the surviving members of the 11th Reg't P. R. V. C. who could be present, had their first reunion since the war, in the pleasant borough of Indiana, this State. Two companies of this regiment, "C" and "D," were raised in Butler county. Of these thirty members attended this reunion, 17 of "C" and 13 of "D."

For the benefit of those who could not attend, and our friends generally who read your paper, it is here proposed to give some account of the "day's doings."

The day was all we could desire in the way of weather. We left Butler on the regular train at 7.40 A. M., and, without accident, would have reached Indiana at about 12.30 P. M. On the train from Butler were Capt. Louden, whom we were all glad indeed to have with us, Capt. Fleeger, Lieut. Sutton, Sergeants Kelly and Black, Corporals Cook, John W. and John S. Campbell, and high privates Shrock, Monie, Lardin, Rothmyer, D. H. Russell and Sam Miller, of Co. "C" Sergeant Cleland, with D. McDonald, of Butler, J. R. Moore, Alex. Kennedy, G. W. Huselton, Web. Graham, D. W. Graham and Evans Nixon, of Co. "D." We were also accompanied by other old soldiers, viz: Maj. J, B. Storey, Prothonotary Russell and Clerk Wright.

At Great Belt, McGuire, of Co. "G," boarded the train. At Delano, Krause, of "C," at Saxon, Sergeant Heckart and Corporal Mnder, of "C." Joe Hazlett, of "D," Lyon, of "E," and Eakman, of "I," had gone from Butler the day before. Others of "D" joined them by the way, and these, making up the number 13.

Col. Jackson and members of Co. "G" joined us at Apollo, and delegations joined us at Saltsburg and other places before we reached Blairsville. At this place we met Col. Gallagher, Maj. Litzinger, Chaplain Torrence, Quartermaster Torrence, Maj. R. A. McCoy, also Capt. H. K. Sloan, who had come down from Indiana to meet us and distribute badges. There were also officers and members of Cos. "A," "E," "I," "H" and "F," with a magnificent brass band of 32 members from Altoona.

After a wait of an hour for the train from Blairsville intersection, we boarded a train of six cars on the Indiana Branch. Leaving on time, at 11.45 A. M., we anticipated a clear track and safe run over the sixteen miles to our destination, but "there's many a slip," &c. Four miles from Blairsville, at a sharp curve around a creek bend, near Black Lick station, and down grade at that, some thoughtless boy ("they say") had been cracking hickorynuts on the rail with a stone about the size of a hen egg, and carelessly left the stone aforesaid on the top of the rail. We did not see the boy, nor the hickorynuts, nor the remains of either in the vicinity at that time, neither did we see the stone, but we heard of it in a way to dispel any doubt as to the fact that it was there. The front wheels of the locomotive were thrown off the track, and bumped along for several rods on the ties before the train could be stopped. Many of the "cold vets" were railroaders, and with their assistance the train men soon got the wheels back on the track again, but the machine was pronounced disabled in some way, and moved off to be laid over for repairs.

A messenger had been sent back to Blairsville for another engine, and in about an hour the sound of its coming was heard; then it came careering in sight. "All aboard" was the word, as it was expected that iron horse would push us ahead until the next station, and then switch off and get in front of the train. Well, push it did, but commenced too sudden. The steam had been kept up too long, and the brakes would not stop the horse, so that he came with a rush and undertook to jam his nose into the hind end of the rear car, and came pretty near doing it; would probably have entirely succeeded had he not got his nose knocked off, and his front parts otherwise disfigured and injured. It was not without effect on the hind end of that car either; the hind trucks were lifted off the track several feet, and the platform, etc., badly bruised up.

One man, Mr. Phail, (he failed to make that coupling) who was riding on the cow-catcher, is said to have jumped just as the collision was about to happen, but was severely injured about the head and face, and probably otherwise. He was an employee of the road, and we were informed that a brother of his was killed during the riotous days of 1877 by a similar collision, and he on the cow-catcher. The rest of the family should take warning.

None of our comrades were hurt at all. An old gentleman, carrying considerable avoirdupois, was on the platform of one of the rear cars, and took in the situation at a glance as he saw that iron horse coming near in his mad career. Of course he thought the ground was a safer place than where he was, and just as the engine struck, so did he, for terra firma. A bank of gradual descent of some twenty feet was on the side where the old gentleman sought for a footing, and down he went, rolling, sliding and tumbling, to the amusement of nobody, until it was known that he was not hurt much, and then it seemed funny, very! A little court-plaster and encouragement set him all right. Strange to say, his name was Jeff Davis, and he was going to Indiana too.

Your correspondent was sitting in the front car, looking out a window, and saw the tumbling of the old gentleman, when just then he heard a crashing of glass in front, and looking saw that by the sudden jar of the collision the corporosity nearest the middle of a man, with his back towards the front window, had been sent crashing through the glass. Possibly the railroad company thinks to-day that that glass was broken on some philosophical principle of sympathy with the crash in the rear! [So it was, but not the rear of that train exactly.]

All this caused a delay of over three hours. There we were—a Quartermaster present but no rations. A few succeeded in getting some bread and butter and coffee, but a hungry set of fellows were there, and old army days were called to mind.

A third engine was procured and by about four o'clock we reached Indiana. What a sight there we saw! The platform, streets and walks around the depot were literally jammed full of people, and they had been anxiously waiting since noon. There were Col. Dan S. Porter, Major Dick Burkman and parts of companies "B" and "K." The military and fire companies were there, and the streets and houses of this town were profusely arched with evergreens and decorated with flags and mottoes and words of welcome. A salute of several guns was fired from a cannon or its equivalent for that purpose.

We fell into line, about 200 of the 11th in all, and at once kept step in unison to the time of the music, with our Colonels and other officers leading us. After a march about town we were drawn up in front of the Court House, where an address of welcome, hearty and eloquent, was delivered by Gen. Harry White, and well responded to by Gen. T. F. Gallagher.

We were assigned places amongst the hospitable people of Indiana for dinner, and as soon as that was over we returned to the Court House, where the meeting was organized as follows: Gen. T. F. Gallagher, President; Col. S. M. Jackson and Capt. Samuel Louden, Vice Presidents; Col. Robert. Litzinger and Major Burkman, Secretaries.

The meeting was opened with prayer by our venerable ex-Chaplain, Rev. Torrence.

We were next highly entertained by an eloquent oration and well delivered by Capt G. W. Fleeger, of Butler, and an interesting history of the regiment by Col. Robert A. McCoy, which time did not allow to be all read. It will be published and a copy sent to each member of the regiment whose address is known. We were also favored with a song by Colonel and Rev. John A. Danks.

We left the Court House about 9 o'clock P. M. and marched to the Normal School building, in the commodious dining hall of which tables were set for 440 men, and provisions enough for 1,000 were there. The hall was beautifully decorated, and the names of every engagement of the 11th in the war, or of the Reserve Corps from Drainesville to Bethesda Church, were on the walls. Thus far all had been grand, here it was magnificent! yes, magnificently grand!

Our venerable Chaplain, Rev. Adam Torrence, of New Alexandria, Westmoreland county, who is now over eighty years of age, sat at the head of one of the long tables and, amid profound silence, asked a blessing upon the rich provisions and the company present.

The eatables commanded our heartiest demonstrations of gladness and relish, and the fair ladies who served, our most intense feelings of admiration. On them we could only look and admire, but on the viands we laid our hands, and took them to our inward bosom with the greatest familiarity! There was no intoxicating beverage at this banquet.

After supper came toasts and responses, as follows: "The 11th Regiment P. R. V. C." Response by Col. Jackson.

"Our Regiment's Friends." Responded to by Sheriff Smith, of Indiana.

"The Pennsylvania Reserve Corps." Response by Rev. James D. Brownlee, who had been a private in Co. K, 8th Regt. P. R. V. C.

"Our Educational Institutions, and Especially the Normal School of Indiana." Response by Dr. French.

Here we were favored with a recitation by Col. Danks on the theme, "The Superiority of the Blue," and a song, "Our God is Marching On," in which the whole audience joined in the chorus.

The next toast was, "Our Deceased Comrades." The band played a dirge and all arose and stood in silence.

"The Ministry of Peace." Response by Rev. Theo. Henderson, who had been a corporal in Co. "B" 11th Regt.

"Our Comrades of the Army of the Potomac." Response by Capt. Chil W. Hazard in an amusing speech full of army jokes and reminiscences.

"The Press." Response by M. J. Shannon, of Indiana.

"The Ladies." Response by Col. R. A. McCoy.

Owing to the lateness of the hour, then midnight, and all desiring to leave for home early next morning, and to get some rest in the meantime, no business was transacted, and no appointment for another reunion. This will be attended to no doubt in due time by the officers.

We left for home at 6 o'clock next morning and arrived at 10.50 without accident and bearing with us the firm impression that the citizens of Indiana cannot be excelled for hospitality, and we would not have missed the reunion for anything. UNUM.

People

Who have been in Ritter & Ralston's Carpet Rooms know that they carry a larger stock than any house outside of the large cities. People who have not been can be convinced by calling in that the above is a fact, and that they sell them at less prices than they can be bought elsewhere.

CIRCULAR.

TO OUR PATRONS:

We would inform our customers and the trade generally, that we have just completed a thorough remodeling of our Mills for the manufacture of Buckwheat Flour, having added some new and extensive machinery. We are now able to offer the whitest, purest and best Buckwheat Flour produced, at anything like a reasonable figure. Our goods have heretofore enjoyed an enviable reputation, as our sales in the past year amply prove, but we think we can place an article in the market now that will challenge competition anywhere, and will not fail to please wherever used. We are prepared to supply the trade in 12½, 25 and 50 pound sacks, and 100 pound bags and barrels.
