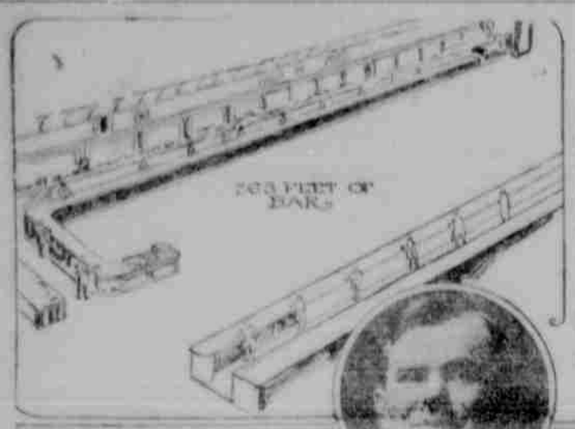
End Has Come for World's Greatest Bar



Seventy seven bartenders and clerks were out of a job.

Sixteen cash registers were for sale.

Two hundred and sixteen feet of bar one foot rolling were worthless.

Bridgeport banks lost a daily average deposit of $5,000 to $1,600,000 a year.

Twenty thousand patrons had to hunt up some other Saturday night destination.

The Wheeling street car company has a lot of extra cars they can use on other lines.

Taxi cab owners found business a little slow.

Bridgeport's biggest build was empty.

A lot of men moved back across the river near their work instead of near a saloon.

Wheeling's midnight influx disappeared.

And a lot of other things happened.

Christ Is Friend of Unfit and Lost Says Evangelist

"The Success of the Faithful," was the D. Dwight Hawk's subject at the First Methodist church revival last night. The preacher drew a picture of the sorrow of fallen and hopeless humanity and the efforts of social men and women to satisfy their soul-hunger. He said, in part:

"People who are seemingly having pleasure in the world are far from the truth of it. Go to the dance hall and you do not find people where Christ dwells. Go to the dance hall and you do not find people where Christ dwells. Go to the dance hall and you do not find people where Christ dwells
