NOTES OF THE POULTRY YARD.

For scaly legs: Rub off scales as much as possible and then soak thoroughly in kerosene. Repeat the dose in twenty-four hours.

The egg that returns a hard, metallic sound when struck will not hatch. The egg with a dead, chalky shell is equally worthless for incubation.

One advantage in feeding whole corn at night, is that it is one of the best grain that can be given for maintaining heat while being hard it requires some time for the gizzard to grind up a full feed, and the fowls do not get so cold and hungry as when some other kind of grain is given.

Do not put ducks' eggs and hens' eggs in incubator together, as experience has demonstrated that such hatches are very unsatisfactory. Either put in all duck eggs or all hen eggs. If you intend to hatch many ducks annually you had better get an incubator purposely for ducks, and there are some good ones especially adapted to this purpose.

It is said that in the fowl kingdom the worst pestiferous bugs and worms take the place of meat, so that when we castrate our poultry we cut them off from their natural larder. We should supply them from ours. Fresh meat is preferable for this purpose to lard, and lean meat rather than fat. They will accept the refuse from the slaughter house—the liver, heart, etc.—with greater thankfulness than we do the choicest cuts.

A chick hatches in a temperature of 102 degrees. If taken from its nest or the incubator and exposed for an hour or two to over 50 degrees it becomes fatally chilled. The downy covering affords little protection. Thousands of incubator chicks get the fatal chill the first week of their lives. Keep the little fellows warm until thoroughly dried off, and furnish them a place to hover under that starts with a temperature of 90 degrees, and does not fall below 80 degrees the first week.

SAN FRANCISCO—A robbery of 5000 sovereigns was committed on board the steamship Oceanic, by which the latest shipment of gold to the United States from Australia was made. The Australian detectives have been working on the case.

WHITBY, Ont.—Mrs. Nellie Hare, living near the depot at Ossawa, Ont., was found dead in her home last night, her face and head smashed to a pulp. There is no clue to the murderer. An inquest is being held.

DO YOU WANT A COOK?
A good one is pretty hard to get, but a 25c "Want Ad" in The Post will bring you lots to choose from. Fact is, a Post "Want Ad." will find almost anything you want if you give it a fair trial.
