UNDOUBTEDLY GENUINE.

The mistress observed one morning that her dinky butler was wearing a ring with a setting almost large enough for a bean-pot lid, if it had possessed the proper ordinary. Later in the day she chanced to hear a conversation between the butler and the maid.

"Ain dat a genuine dimond you sportin', Jakey?" the maid asked, perspiring and jealous about equally balanced in her voice.

"An dis a dimond?" reproachfully. "Does yo' spose I'd sport a thing wot I'd a "a-pawnin' mah? Hand de man a dimond an he is sho good what he sees in."

"Well, yo' mean yo' bought it fo' me, yo' wif de money yo' ought to have paid yo' mistress with a dimond. I was fooled once, but I guess not this time, an I don't mean to be fooled again."

"Come, Lucy, be a sport, Lucy. Git out!"

"Well, almost bein' long as hit am a genuine opinion I'll accept it fo a 'engagement ring.'"—Housekeeper.

HAPPENINGS IN VERMONT

returned to town and taken a position with the Middlebury branch of the Vermont Marble company.—H. S. Thomas and wife of Altoona, Pa., are visiting friends and relatives in this section.

The trustees of the village of Middlebury have passed a series of resolutions convening to the fire department of the village their appreciation for their efficient work for the past year and of the interest taken in the care and preservation of the fire apparatus. A DULL DAY MEANS WORK BEING DONE

The Results Will Show When the Returns Come in a Few Days from Now.

Several candidates in the Free Press voting contest made additions to their totals yesterday, but the gains were none of them large, except in the case of Mrs. Hawes of this city, who turned in nearly 24,000 votes. However a dull day in this office generally means that the candidates are busy getting votes, and that returns from their work may be expected a few days later. Watch the surprises as they are sprung about the end of the week.
