A School Incident

Corporal punishment in schools was given a severe setback in this city recently, although in the end is was proven the system was right. In California, and in San Francisco in particular, it is unlawful for a school teacher or principal to administer corporal punishment to a pupil, and a rather sad state of affairs exists. The San Francisco Post has the following to say of the situation:

It happened recently in a San Francisco public school that an unruly boy was taken to task by his teacher. While the teacher was talking to the youngster in an effort to bring him to reason, the boy called her a vile name. She reported the fact to the principal, who in turn undertook to talk to the boy, but the latter denied point blank that he had applied the epithet to his class teacher. Then the principal sent for the boy's mother and told her in the presence of the teacher and the boy what had occurred. The mother said: "I shall believe my son rather than the teacher," and then, turning to him, asked him if he had called the teacher the vile name. The boy answered that he had not. The principal said: "Madam, in my opinion you have done your son the greatest injury possible. There is only one course left, you must take your son out of school," and the incident closed.

Corporal punishment in the public schools is a thing of the past, and rightly so. But teachers cannot get on with many boys and girls without the co-operation of their parents, and co-operation is impossible if fathers and mothers are under illusions about their children. Education begins at home. No public school system in the world can be a success unless there is a preliminary training that begins in the cradle, and that training depends upon the common sense of the mother.

It is natural and probably "human nature" to believe implicitly in one's own children. The primitive father and mother believe that their own child can do no wrong; but successful and genuine education largely depends upon the principle that parents should be under no more illusions about their own children than they are about the children of others.

Passing Of The Horse

The harvest of the horse faker is now at hand in Chicago, it being their game to take advantage of the auto truck's invasion and advertise frantically in the name of a teaming concern that they have a stableful of discarded equines which will be sold at "sacrifice prices," and then soak the credulous. In some papers the ads of disconsolate "teaming" companies are run without changing for months, and in the meantime the proprietors do a fine business in animals that are ready for the killers but can be doped into the semblance of life. The power truck, however, has made a great inroad in the heavy hauling. Nevertheless, the demand is so great that prices continue high, for farmers do not change their ways with readiness.

The fact which statisticians have discovered that the high cost of living is due to the appetites of the 25,000,000 farm workhorses, which consume every fifth bushel of grain produced in the country, has not driven the horse out of use, but the sales of tractor power outfits has reached enormous proportions. One concern last year is said to have sold 75,000. The indictment of the horse is based largely upon the continuous round of feed and chores which he is responsible for and the accusation that when a year is averaged the horse works one hour and loafs eight. In the days of the efficiency expert it is regarded as heinous that, working or idle, each horse requires 27 minutes of time in the everlasting "chores."

The displacement of the horse is expected to complete the industrial change begun by other machinery, by which a reduction of the labor needed for each operation on the farm released men to do useful things in manufacturing the farmer's raw materials instead of marketing them abroad, as in the past, with a small factor of labor in their value and with a serious loss in soil fertility.

With both the north and south pole located, no rush has been noticed to the new districts by the army of stampeders who are always waiting to sell lots in the first townsite.

W. W. Booher, owner of the Elko Independent, has transferred his interests in that paper. There is not an exchange in the state but what will welcome the change.

LIMIT NUMBER OF SALOONS IN FALLON

At the meeting of the city council last Tuesday evening Councilman J. C. Jones introduced an ordinance which provides for the limiting of the number of saloons in Fallon to five, instead of 12, as is now the case. Fallon has been overcrowded with thirst parlors ,and while the measure is not intended to put anyone out of business, it is aimed at preventing the issuing of any more licenses where saloons go out of business—and it has been hinted for some time that there are more saloons than could exist on the patronage, not that our people are turning to temperance but rather because the saloon business is overdone. The measure will come up for final passage a week from next Tuesday evening.—Churchill Eagle.

If you should hear, incidentally, that your favorite store had hed an unadvertised special sale of something you've been wanting to buy, you'd feel that it had not protected your interests—wouldn't you?

AUSTIN NEV. CON. PRODUCE RESULTS

Conditions could scarcely be better in the workings on the Austin Nevada Consolidated, says the Reville of Saturday.

In the incline shaft which has been reopened to the bottom Mr. Richardson took samples of the best ore and had them assayed. The result was $1044.60 in silver. Of course he does not claim this to be an average test of the ore but it shows that all of the quality has not been taken from Lander hill. The work in the incline will now be in virgin ground and important results can be expected at any time.

In the tunnel at a distance of 40 feet a ledge has been cut having a width of 2½ feet. No assays of this ore have yet been made but it is not anticipated that it will show more than milling values.

The workings on this property are in close proximity to that portion of Lander hill that yielded millions of the richest silver ore ever mined.

For quick results try the want ad columns of the Bonanza.
