DEATH FOR ALL PHOTOGRAPHERS WILL SHUT OUT PICTURE MEN

(Special Dispatch by the International News Service.)

NEW YORK, August 28.—If the warring powers of Europe are able to carry out their plans, this is destined to be a war without pictures. Since the first hint of hostilities, this country has been flooded with pictures of mobilization, the gathering of troops in England, France, Belgium and Austria-Hungary. The first fighting broke out ahead of time when the Belgians so heroically and unexpectedly opposed the Germans. This was not according to schedule.

Belgium at the outset allowed some correspondents and photographers within her lines, and for several weeks there have been many Belgian war pictures in circulation. But from now on authentic war pictures are likely to be scarce.

Information, considered reliable, has reached here that the kaiser has issued orders that any man caught by his troops in the field with a camera shall be shot. Similar information has been received about orders issued by the French. Should these reports prove correct, in substance, the prospects of making a photographic record of the great war are distinctly discouraging.

Still, the war photographers have not given up hope. Tactful persistence has worked wonders before, and it may accomplish results again before this war has advanced far. As soon as developments showed that war was inevitable, many American photographers hurried to England to see what could be done in the matter of war pictures. In all of the capitals these picture men are now waiting, bringing to bear all the influence possible to obtain permission to go with the armies, and ready to seize any chance, take any risk, to get pictures of the real fighting.

Some of the best newspaper and magazine photographers of America are now in Europe, and it is certain that if there be the slightest opportunity, they will make pictures. In the first heat of mobilization, photographs were made everywhere, and these have been coming to the United States by every ship.

So far as moving pictures are concerned, no American company has yet proposed a partnership arrangement with the kaiser for a series of war movies. There seems to be a feeling that the Francisco Villa precedent might not hold good in Europe.

In the present contest conditions are not of the sort to appeal to any photographer who understands them. The battles are certain to be of stupendous proportions, and very bloody. The majority of them are sure to be so widespread as to be beyond the range of any camera or artist to depict as a whole.

Yet if a clever operator had only been in one of the forts at Liege, he might have made a splendid pictorial record of some of the German charges. Some wonderful improvements have recently been made in moving picture comeras. With the ordinary lens it is necessary to be no more than 200 feet away from the subject at the furthest.

But recently the telephoto lens has been adapted to the moving picture camera. The most powerful of these can make a picture of a man at 600 yards, so big as to fill the plate. Only one of these extraordinarily powerful lenses has so far been manufactured, and it is the property of a French moving picture company. But if, in the present war, there should come opportunity for pictures, it is certain that many photographers will order one of the long-range instruments.

The possibilities of such a lens in photographing a battle may be understood when it is remembered experience has taught that most of the fighting is done at ranges of from 1,000 to 400 yards. That is proved by the zones of losses. Military surgeons have found that 20 per cent of the losses have occurred at ranges of 1000 yards or over; 60 per cent occur at ranges from 1000 to 400 yards; 10 per cent in the final rush, and 10 per cent in the pursuit.

So with a lens capable of making pictures at from 600 to 800 yards, a photographer could make an excellent photographic record of the hottest battle, were it not for two difficulties. One of these is that for the most part the soldiers are lying flat on the ground, or are behind ramparts. The other is, that bullets have not yet been invented that will discriminate between the enemy and non-combatant photographers.

PIOCHE MINES PUT MEN BACK TO WORK

PRINCE CONSOLIDATED AND AMALGAMATED MAINTAINING ORE SHIPMENTS.

The Prince Consolidated and the Amalgamated Pioche are maintaining their usual ore shipments and with the exception of the leases, practically all of which are closed, the local mines are not affected by the war, says the Pioche Record. The belief is rapidly gaining ground that all of the metals will soon be quoted much higher.

The Amalgamated Pioche Mines & Smelters corporation, which laid off a portion of its working force last week, has received orders from the New York office of the company to put the men back to work and to push development and mining operations with more vigor than ever. This means that work is to be started again on the 1400 level and that the crosscut to the big Black ledge will be run through without delay.

During the past week the management has been pumping water to the surface, but reports that there has been a perceptible decrease in the volume of water contained in the 1200 winze has induced Superintendent Van Wagenen to adopt other tactics, and a portion of the water will be delivered to the 1200 Raymond & Ely drift.

Extraordinary precautions will be taken in the operations to be resumed on the 1400 by driving drill holes ahead of the men, as well as into the roof and sides in the drift being run toward the Black ledge winze. With the absence of maps and other reliable data, it is a matter of considerable speculation as to the exact point in which a contact will be made with the winze and releasing the water now stored therein. The safety of the men is a point not to be disregarded by the management.

Having been notified that settlement will be made for ore shipped on a basis of 52 cents per ounce for the silver content, the shipment of the mine's product will not be retarded. Returns from the car of lead ore from the 1400 were highly gratifying, in fact, much better than was anticipated.
