ADVANCE OF ARTILLERY.

ALL military precedents have been shattered by the successful use of very large howitzers in the war now raging in Europe. These guns are accurate and can be fired at high angles. Shells are loaded with high explosives apparently as powerful as the best dynamite. The problem of firing shells so loaded has been solved, probably by the invention of an explosive that will stand the shock of the discharge of the gun. As soon as nitro-glycerine was discovered, artillery experts began to experiment with it, but could not find a way to use it because the shell would burst from the shock when the gun was fired.

It appears probable that the Germans have simply developed the guns invented by an American some years ago, one of which was tested at Sandy Hook but failed to satisfy our military experts. It is also of interest to remember that the only guns ever built to fire shells loaded with nitro-glycerine or dynamite were the compressed air tubes with which the Vesuvious was armed. They would do the work if the shells happened to hit anything, but they proved a failure at Santiago during our war with Spain because they lacked range and accuracy.

High-angle fire is a very old idea, but the Germans have developed it to a point that makes the gun the master of the fort, as far as can be judged at present. Firearms made steel armor obsolete three centuries ago, and now big howitzers seem to have done the same for permanent fortifications.

McADOO IS ANGRY.

SECRETARY McADOO is angry with the banks because they do not take his view of loaning money. He believes that they are refusing to loan it on reasonable terms and are hoarding it to the great detriment of business. Undoubtedly he is basing his protest upon a correct theory. He maintains rightly that business is injured when money is hoarded without necessity.

In all times of commercial stress those who have money to loan become more careful in making their loans. Fearing a financial crash they are prone to be controlled by fears which are not justified. Lack of confidence spreads from the banks to other classes and produces harder times than are warranted.

Secretary McAdoo believes that the bankers of the country are altogether too meticulous at this time. He feels that they should adopt a more liberal policy and he has begun an inquiry to discover whether the banks to which government money has been given for facilitating the movement of crops are not among the chief offenders. He accompanies his inquiry with a threat that his department will withdraw government deposits from banks found to be hoarding money and charging excessive interest and will place these funds with those banks which are loaning money at reasonable rates to meet the legitimate demands of business and for moving the crops.

The secretary of the treasury would have acted more wisely had he withdrawn his threat until after his inquiry had given him data upon which to form a sound opinion. It is certain that the bankers in each community know more about their local conditions than does the secretary of the treasury, and they are guided largely by these local conditions. Not every community is suffering from a severe money stringency and where the stringency is greatest the bankers probably are justified in the care they are taking to safeguard their loans.

After experiencing at various times fire, flood and dynamite, the Bonanza still lives and will continue to live as long as the people demand a fearless paper.

With the flood of Russian and Austrian names pouring in over the wires it is a good time for proofreaders to go duck shooting. No one will miss them.

President Wilson is receiving so many protests from Europe that he may well be excused if he exclaims, "The lady doth protest too much, methinks."

Clark county is boosting the fact that one of its artesian wells washed out the local railroad. This is the way to make the best out of misfortune.

Isn't it a striking commentary on public morality that the state officers who were investigated by the last legislature are all running again.

The price of beans has dropped 20 cents a bushel, but Bostonians, though gratified, are too dignified to yodel.

There is no use of sneering at The Hague. It is about the only place in Europe where peace is certain.

The official reports from the battlefield are now talking about the weather, which means "nothing doing."

The navy is to be democratized. Is not that a natural thing for a Democratic administration to do?

BERLIN BUSINESS ALMOST NORMAL WITH SCARCELY EVIDENCE OF WAR

(By International News Service.)

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Contrary to the reports that have been circulated here and in the United States, Berlin is not demoralized and panic-stricken by the war, according to Philip H. Wood, an American who has just reached London from the German capital.

In Berlin conditions are almost normal, Wood said, and things are going on with little change. There is little excitement.

"Life is going on practically the same as usual," he said. "There is no more difference than there is in London. The price of food is the same as before the war; the cafes are all open and have their bands playing; there are almost as many concerts; many of the theaters still have full houses, and save for the suppressed excitement, there is very little to show that Germany is in a state of war. I never saw any refugees.

Wood, who made a point of talking with as many people as possible in Germany, did not observe any anxiety as to the supply of food. Apparently no one was taking any pains to be economical, and he was told by several authorities that there was enough food already in the country to last for 18 months.

There was also optimism as to the result of the war.

"The general view," said Wood, "was that if the Germans don't win they will make it a draw. They are satisfied that their army can never be beaten, and that the most the allies can hope for is a stale-mate. Even if they have to retreat from France, they are confident that they will be able to defend their own country for an indefinite time.

"I asked two officers if they had considered the possibility of defeat and one said, 'Yes, it may be just possible; but if so we should not be here, and in all Germany there would not be more than 50,000 men left between the ages of 17 and 50.'

"My own opinion," added Wood, "is that the war will be stopped by mediation within a month. But when I suggested it to a German officer he said, 'It's no good talking to us about mediation till we're occupied Paris and St. Petersburg. Then we might listen to you.'"

Wood found considerable bitterness against England, and he was rarely successful in persuading anyone to believe that England was fighting Prussian militarism rather than the German people.

"They won't believe it," he said. "They think that England wants to crush Germany and they will all fight to the last ditch rather than submit. I saw no sign of any dissension among the Socialists. English people are treated well."
