A NOBLE DREAM

Civilization owes much to the dreamer. All the we have and every stepping place of progress to which we reached today, was some one's dream at one time.

Dr Sun Yat-sen, first president of the Chinese republic, dictator, adventurer in oriental politics, and recently proclaimed at Canton president of China, has a dream. Dr Sun dreams of 400,000,000 people awakening from a long sleep and discovered that their hell is material wealth of the other nations men seek; he dreams of [illegible] which Dr Sun supposes will [illegible] and peace. Sun sees China [illegible] wards the world to name China [illegible] business the world has ever [illegible] in the interests of the peace of nations and the prosperity and happiness of the Chinese.

To accomplish this Dr Sun says the chief essential other than foreign help is to win the confidence of the Chinese people. [illegible] will not [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] to spit [illegible] the [illegible] the Sun World.

A dream worth having.

SWAT THAT FLY!

The search of a little girl [illegible] never closes the door and for always carries again that [illegible] that [illegible] Flies and bugs do the same thing on a similar scale. Dust flows the United States health service says that they never wipe their feet.

Many warnings have been issued by health officials and precautions against the menace of flies during the last few years and the results of recent investigations confirm them in the wisdom of the campaign that is being made against the pests that carry the germs of the [illegible] communicate them to human beings by contact with food.

Well organized plans for killing flies may be made successful [illegible] considerable expense but it can only be done by eliminating the places that may be used for breeding. This means that more than ordinary effort must be made to insure cleanliness of stables and [illegible] and other places that promote the multiplication of flies.

Every home should be effectively screened against flies. It is a difficult handicap in the modern [illegible] the fly out and keep food free. It is not [illegible] of screens to exclude the flies from homes. Personal safety of the family should urge every [illegible] good [illegible]

A FATEFUL QUESTOION

[illegible] in the famine [illegible] by a [illegible] ical question at which men may well shudder to [illegible] a decision. All cannot be saved. The [illegible] shall be saved? is the question. The food distributing [illegible] Shall food be given to the young and the old who could not be of much further use for period? Decisions on just such problems are being given in China. It seems heartless, inhuman, that men and women should be condemned to die from starvation, but when there is not enough grain available to keep all alive, it is better that some should be saved than that the distribution should be so widespread that the portions are insufficient for any.

The philanthropically inclined have done much to lessen the horrors of the famine. Millions would have starved had not relief been given. Considering the difficulties of transportation marvelous has been the accomplishment, but it has not been possible to reach all who needed help and the situation is still acute. That is the reason it devolves on sympathetic souls to answer the question, "Whom shall we let die?" Those in charge of the relief may well hesitate and seek evasion.

POOR OLD KANSAS.

Not so many years ago it was that William Allen White propounded the question: "What's the matter with Kansas?" and in our humble and obscure corner we arise to repeat the query.

We read in last Saturday's issue of the Kansas City Star that a Kan-
