To Meet Fall Weather Half Way

HERE are two coats one will meet the weather on its own terms. Both of them are very big, big as to them hints of wraps and the other recalls capes. It takes the ways of autumn fashion and are in their new model which will be in need the sweep of winter. Some of the under will undoubtedly be lined and perhaps adjustable to one or other.

The dark coat is made of simple velvet and has a wide collar of beaver fur. It is a most graceful model and is equally suitable to the young girl and to her mother. The sleeves are still wide. It has a natural waistline and one of the smartest features is found in the sleeves set with slit openings. This model follows the line of the Russian blouse and has three pleats at each side ranging from the shoulder to the line of the dart. The sleeves are flaring but small—as coat sleeves go—so that the wearer can free in them. This very large buttons fasten the coat and the collar may be flung up about the throat and turned there. The cuffs and facings of the coat are trimmed with [illegible] Contrasting characters are made in the usual colors, the cloth lines being [illegible] and lines that never grow tiresome.
