WALLINGFORD PICTURE AT BUTLER TODAY

Sleepy small town transformed by crooks—"Get Rick Quick" Wallingford and his confederates forced into honest—

How a sleepy little town, without ambition, smugly satisfied with its own conservative traditions, can be transformed into a thriving hustling and prosperous small city is amusingly set forth in "Get Rich Quick" Wallingford, which will be shown at the Butler as a special attraction today.

It details the adventures of those master confidence men, J. Rufus Wallingford and G. Horace Daw, who descend upon Battlesburg, a middle western town, to fleece its citizens by hair-brained schemes. Neither one of them of course has any intention of carrying out their so-called manufacturing projects, but their industry starts a real live boom, and they are made honest in spite of themselves. It is alive with comedy from start to finish, as everyone who has read the Wallingford stories know. Tomorrow, Constance Talmadge in "Woman's Place," filled with comedy from start to finish.
