THE SOUTH EMBRACING PROTECTION

"Probably for other reasons than the American Industry protagonists desire, yet the future prosperity of the south lies, the sand dirt of the southern states from an almost purely agricultural basis to one of well balanced agriculture and manufacture," says the Republican Publicity association, through its president, Hon. Jonathan Bourne Jr. "It has been well said that the salvation of the south lies certainly in a farmer's century was its greatest curse. Surely but steadily the south realizes the possibilities along the lines of manufacturing, and in recent years the production of manufactured goods has increased at a rapid rate.

"It is noteworthy that certain alterations in the tariff bill in the recent session of congress, announced southern senators indicated protective rates. This is a comparatively new attitude for a southern organization to take. Nevertheless it is apparent that southern states, including the south, have not kept step with southern business men, for nearly all members of both houses of congress were almost unanimous in voting against the protective tariff bill on its final passage. Southern publications, like many southern journals, are consistently adhere to outworn economic theories. Their eyes are upon the past rather than upon the future.

"In many respects the south is peculiarly endowed with resources which promise a marvelous development in manufacturing. The south has coal, it has almost every form of raw material. It has abundant cheap water power. It has facilities for both domestic and transoceanic shipping. These, among other advantages, have resulted in a great growth of textile manufacturing, so that today one-half of the cotton goods manufactured in the United States are produced in the south.

"In years gone by southerners have been content to produce a few staple products and cotton which they often sold at ruinous prices, while they bought their manufactured goods from the north or from foreign countries. That policy kept the south impoverished. The want of factories limited the market for the products of the farm. With the establishment and extension of manufacturing industries and the consequent building up of larger town population, there will be a nearer, a more constant, a more dependable and a more profitable market for the products of agriculture.

"These are facts which no thoughtful southern business man will question. Yet his representatives in congress oppose the protective tariff which helps to build up American manufactories, and propose in case the congress shall once more become democratic, to repeal the protective tariff recently enacted. This should be kept in mind by every southerner when he goes to the polls in November. The voter who wishes the south to be self-reliant in industry and who wishes to keep in his own section of the country money heretofore sent outside to purchase manufactured goods, should take care to mark his ballot for a candidate who is expressly and unqualifiedly pledged to the support of a tariff policy which will insure the stability of those factories already established in the south and constantly add to their number."

SECRETARY OF STATE

A wide and varied experience in many lines of endeavor, including service as railroad engineer and fireman, prospector, miner, bookkeeper, purchasing agent and later business manager for the Caroline Mining company, with which he was connected for 20 years, district manager for a life insurance company and lawyer gives W. B. Alexander, republican candidate for secretary of state, not only a thorough technical knowledge of the duties of the office he seeks, but makes him familiar with the problems of practically every industry in Nevada.

A short resume of Mr. Alexander's business career follows: After leaving school he secured a position in the New York Central shops as engine wiper, rising through various grades to locomotive fireman, later being promoted to engineer, in which capacity he served for three years.

He then went to Cuba, where he spent three years on a sugar plantation, returning to the States in 1884 and engaging in prospecting and mining in Colorado.

He later entered the service of the Caroline Mining company as a bookkeeper. After serving in this capacity for ten years he was selected as purchasing agent, a position which he held for five years. He then became business manager of the company and acted in this responsible position for five years.

He then read law in Colorado for three years, while doing court reporting, and from 1902 to 1904 was district manager for the Travelers insurance company.

Coming to Nevada in 1904, he engaged in prospecting at Goldfield for a time, acting as secretary-treasurer of the Montana Tonopah Mines company at Tonopah.

Mr. Alexander has been a resident of Reno since 1913, where he served as president of the chamber of commerce for two terms, in which period he built up the organization to a great extent. For three years he was chairman of the state board of highway directors. He has been engaged in mining for the last several years.

The secretary of state is a member of many important boards and commissions. His office can aid materially in placing the operation of the state government upon a solid economical basis and Mr. Alexander, with his practical business experience in many lines, is well fitted for this work.

STATE TREASURER

"Ed" Hunting, republican candidate for state treasurer, has been active in the business and public life of Las Vegas for the past 15 years and is a director of the chamber of commerce and local chairman for division 111 of the telegraphers. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Las Vegas realty board and aided in incorporating a new bank there when the need of such an institution became apparent.

Mr. Hunting began his business career some 28 years ago as an accountant and worked up to a responsible position in the main office of the Holt Manufacturing company. He left this position to assist in handling an important administrative office for the C., B. & Q. railroad.

He soon became imbued with the spirit of railroading and gained a working knowledge of telegraphy, in which branch he has steadily climbed from one important assignment to another, until now he is "repeater expert" at Las Vegas.
