THE DEMOCRATIC ARMADA

The last act in the great tragedy of the wooden ships is now being witnessed. Towing high in the mid-ocean and sold at auction in the hundreds of dollars the 300 wooden ships over which Denman and Goethals wrangled are being stripped, dismantled and junked. The head of a company which purchased the fleet and its property recently made public some of the items which the stripping of these ships will produce. His list includes 12 miles of six foot smokestack, 200,000 tons of scrap iron and steel, 5000 tons of brass and copper, 12,000,000 feet of wire cable, 2500 miles of pipe, 162 engines of 1400 horsepower each, 64 turbine engines, 776 brass condensers, 452 water tube boilers, 2200 steam pumps, 9000 tons of water tanks, 5000 drill presses, anvils, vises, etc., 1400 steering wheels, 600 tons of rope, 12,000 steam and air gauges and 5500 tons of anchor chain.

Many of these vessels, indeed the majority of them, had never put to sea. The wooden ship program was adhered to during the war with a perversity that was almost suggestive of something decadent in Denmark. In spite of the storm of protests and criticism which was raised against it. It was one of the high lights in a record of bungling and mismanagemen in he shipping board which eventuated in the political decapitation of William Denman and the left handed promotion of General George Goethals who opposed the Denman program and saw his predictions concerning the fleet fulfilled.

The Spanish armada of the sixteenth century at least had the satisfaction of getting outside its own waers and going down bravely. It demoralized. The democratic armada was denied even the privilege of weighing anchor. The wooden fleet presents a splendid illustration of democratic futility, inefficiency and of its ignoble end would turn the vain gloriousness. Who that reads ship of state over to a party guilty of such waste and wreckage or would hesitate to vote against the party whose career throughout presents a sickening record of wooden ships.

DEFEAT THE STATE CAPITOL MACHINE

Only by sweeping out of office the entire brigade that dominates the capitol can a change be effected in the government of Nevada.

The state government is administered by boards and commissions. The various elective officials constitute these bodies. They make practically all appointments, conduct the various departments and expend the funds appropriated by the legislatures, says Reno Gazette. Pickett, Theodore Steinmetz, I. H. Kent and others have been shoved aside and ignored. They are no longer consulted and their counsel, even if offered, would receive no consideration. Party [illegible] has been seized by the capitol group, headed by George Cole and a cowdy organized little clique located in Reno. They make up the rules, discourage the entrance of new blood into the party affairs and run matters to suit themselves.

It is an unwholesome and unhealthy condition.

The whole outfit should be defeated and a set of men placed in charge of public affairs who are responsible to the people.
