Now and then in its mad career of audacity and cussedness the San Francisco Chronicle gets out of the o'er smart vein which is its general tone, and does really clever thing. We herewith give an instance of its clevernesss. It quotes "from memory" the Bulletin, as follows:

We have told members of the Legislature repeatedly how they should vote, and it is to us incomprehensible that they should be averse to claim any right of private judgment. Any man who does not vote as we desire refuses to do so simply because he has been bought up, body and soul, by the railroad, and we will have a drop of his heart's blood for every dirty dime with which his infamy has been bought. Every man who does a vote against our programme or ruff comes to San Francisco, the indignant populace should resent the loathsome presence of the degraded wretch. They will do so. We will lead them on to smear with gore the hideous record of the villain's betrayal of his sacred trusts. We will hunt the cur down, hounds and fiend hunted down to the depths of the bottomless pit where he belongs. We will see that he shall be hung, and drawn and quartered and tarred and feathered and censured by the entire community. We swear that we will have this thing our way, or the Sacramento River shall run incarnadine with the poisonous life currents of the miserable scoundrels who obey not the Bulletin. Hear and tremble, ye dens of corruption, for we are after you, to blight and blast your hellish career and hound your infamous progeny.

This is a legitimate interpretation of the swaggering tone of the Bulletin, and the paraphrase is quite an admissible one; and its concession and presentation by the Chronicle would seem to suggest that the proprietors of that high-spiced but not skillfully flavored newspaper would rather be caught in the act of ridiculing a rival in business than co-operating with the same for the accomplishment of a common object. In other words the Chronicle would rather blackguard Pickering, Fitch & Co. than assist Booth by acting in concert with them. If Booth should be defeated the Chronicle will make haste to lay the blame on the Bulletin and Call.
