WALL STREET GRAFTERS.

For a long time Thomas Lawson has been regarded as authority in money matters. Whatever this pompous money magnate had to say about finance was regarded as law and gospel, both rolled into one.

He was an ardent Republican and dictated the financial policies of his party along with Mark Hanna and others who liked the partisan money there was in it.

Whatever stocks Morgan touched were considered sure things by the public. His name as a director of a company was a tower of strength. It was generally estimated that Morgan could make no mistakes in judgment when it came to finance.

About a year ago there were whispers in Wall street that some of the colossal deals were not going just exactly right.

He financed the hundred million steel combine and of course this was a great thing for the Republican party which pledged to keep up the tariff on steel and there was bound to be a big profit.

Then the steel trust got good to its employes and let them buy some of the stock and the public got in and now there has been a shrinkage of many millions and it is still shrinking.

The people began to suspect the character of the assets being other of Morgan's over-capitalization and there was a movement toward cover which now amounts to a rush.

Bryan denounced the financial policy of Morgan and his men some time ago, but Morgan merely said Bryan made a blunder and paid no attention to him. Bryan said that the wiping out of silver as a money metal gave Wall street a chance to rob the public and make corners and combines and the people who voted against Bryan's idea are now cursing the financial policies of Morgan.

The latest expose is a showing that some stock for which $75,000 was asked six months ago went into the pool for the public to bite at and when it got into the pool its par value was five millions and it was selling to suckers on the street at two million five hundred thousand, because Morgan's name was mixed up in it.

Morgan has shown himself to be a mere bunko steerer and grafter, but he will doubtless contiue to dictate the financial policy of the Republican party just the same and the party will believe in him from force of habit.

Charley Lewis is in this city from Oakland.

Lieutenant Governor Allen has returned from his home. He reports his daughter, Miss Daisy, in a very critical condition.

Both sons of Jas. Twaddle, of the V. & T. are down with the measels.

Ed. Wasen has an attractive display in his window in the line of canned goods. Just how he managed to get the cans to stay in the positions they are in is not clear to us. We are wondering if he has not an hipnotic spell over them.

Herb Robinson leaves in a few days for Morgan's cattle in Meadow canyon to do the assessment work.

The Band minstrels have been postponed.

On account of rain, the workmen on the Brougher mansion took a lay off.
