[From the Banner of the South.]

Our Confederate Dead.

BY MRS. A. L. M'GEE.

Come, muse of history, come with me,
And your delighted eyes shall see,
How proud a structure we can boast—
The Temple of our loved, and lost,
Its deep foundations laid in right,
Hurl back the shock of fiendish might;
Its finely polished columns rise
In grandeur to our Southern skies,
What forms are those within the fane?
A brave, unsullied, noble train;
With garments dyed in patriot gore,
Whose names shall live forevermore,
Come, Clio! nib your pen anew,
The fairest pages wait for you;
Now dip it deep in molten gold,
And Southern heroes' deeds unfold,
See Johnston, near the pinnacle,
And all his deeds of valor tell;
See Jackson with his pious soul,
Where waves of glory round him roll;
Brave Garnett's shield a jewel wears,
Still brighter than the name he bears;
And on our Polk the surplice shines,
With brilliant gems from heavenly mines;
Give gallant Stuart, in words of flame,
Justitia's wreath around his name;
A finer line for Pelham now,
A younger laurel for his brow;
The swift and strong McCulloch bounds,
From place to place on golden rounds,
Until he mounts a splendid height,
And wings the martyr's starry flight.
Ashby is but synonyme
For gallant Southern chivalry.

But, stop! I will not call each name,
Its record is eternal Fame.
Ye muses! drop a laurel wreath,
On every bleak and barren heath,
Where lies the humblest of our braves,
In glory's consecrated graves,
Upon our gallant seamen's crest,
Let everlasting honors rest;
For ceaseless waves their requiem toll,
In thunder-tones from Pole to Pole.
Like treasures in the ocean's bed,
So are our precious unknown dead,
The casket we may never find,
But in our heart the gem's enshrined.

Urania with divinest notes,
And crown of stars, in azure floats,
Goddess of melody divine!
Your strains must mingle now with mine.
Come! marshal all the spirit-throng,
With Freedom's noblest, sweetest song,
Then crown them with the hero's plume;
And immortelles on their tomb.

From these bright pages let us learn
How deeds of valor grow and burn;
Apollo rises like a dream
And gilds them with a radiant beam:
The record is so dazzling bright
Our vision cannot bear the sight;
Stop, Clio! veil your dewy eyes,
Its lustre shines beyond the skies.

DOG VS. WOLF.—The Mémorial de la Loire relates that recently in the south of France, a shepherd's dog, left in charge of a flock of sheep and a little boy of three years old, were suddenly surprised by a large wolf. The dog did battle bravely, but by the time the shepherd came to the rescue he was laid prostrate by his ferocious assailant. The poor beast's life was at first despaired of, but his master, determined to save him if possible, had his leg amputated, and now Tambour, with his three sound legs and a wooden one, is almost as active as ever, and trots his ten miles without grumbling.
