Exit 1881.

Now write 1882.

The county officers who have been in office the past three years will retire Monday morning and be succeeded by those chosen at the last election. This county has seldom if ever been more fortunate in their public servants than during the term now expiring. Sheriff DEAN, though quite prominent and very popular in the west was but little known outside of that section when he came here three years ago, but he now returns to his home in South Creek, not only one of the most widely known gentlemen in the county, but the most popular man who has ever filled the sheriff's office. He has so discharged the onerous and responsible duties of the office as not to unnecessarily oppress or annoy the unfortunate debtor, while acting with strict fidelity to plaintiffs. "A little brief authority" did not "puff him up," and he remains the same affable, unassuming, courteous gentleman he was born. His friends are not confined to the Republican party, though he is as true as steal to his principles. While Mr. DEAN, like a sensible gentleman, as he is, retires to his farm again, we shall be greatly mistaken if his fellow citizens do not soon call him into public life.

Prothonotary BLACKMAN is his own successor, and the choice could not have been bettered. It is a noteworthy fact that Bradford County has been particularly fortunate in the selection of prothonotaries, never having had a poor one. But Mr. BLACKMAN is the peer of any of his predecessors as an officer, while he excels in those traits which make a man justly popular with his fellows. His heart is large and beats in sympathy with his less fortunate brethren who are always received with the same cordiality as those upon whom fortune smiles. The duties of the office have been promptly, faithfully and pleasantly performed, leaving no ground for fault-finding on the part of any one having business to transact there.

A. C. FRISBIE, Register and Recorder, gives place to Hon. J. H. WEBB, the unwritten law of the Republican party having decreed that re-nominations for this office must not be made. He goes out of office with the confidence and best wishes of all who have made his acquaintance. Himself and son, Mr. CLAYTON FRISBIE, have done the work of the office during his term and the records have never been more neatly kept, nor the duties of the office discharged more satisfactorily than during his administration.

The constitution bars the County Treasurer from serving two consecutive terms, and Mr. JOHN H. GRANT retires after three years incumbency, during which a larger amount of money has been received and paid out than in any other similar period since the organization of the county, and we may truthfully say the interests of tax-payers have never been more carefully guarded nor the finances more prudently managed. It became necessary to make a loan to raise money to erect the poor house and it was largely due to Mr. GRANT'S efforts that the bonds were negotiated at a very low rate of interest, in the face of strong temptations to allow his friends to take them at a higher rate. In this transaction the county saved more than his salary. He superintended the payments for the work on the poor house in person and aided the Commissioners very greatly in the prosecution of the work. He deserves great credit for the practical interest displayed in securing to the county a house for the poor which will grow in favor as its usefulness becomes better known to the public. Among those whom coming generations will thank for this noble institution Mr. GRANT will stand prominent and his name as an upright, prudent and faithful custodian of the county funds will long remain to do honor to his memory.

The County Commissioners, Messrs. BRADFORD, HURST and RANSOM have served during a period of unusual interest to the tax-payers, large sums of money having been expended and much extraordinary work required. That the board faithfully discharged its work is evident in the re-election of two of them—the other, Mr. HURST, declining the honor of a re-nomination. They have done well for the county and deserve the endorsement they have received.

What we have said in regard to the Commissioners will apply to the County Auditors, Messrs WELLES, PRATT and MOODY, two of whom have been elected for another term.

Ex Senator Conkling has the reputation of uttering bitterer satire than any of our public men, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean, but it is certainly the fact none of them can shape a compliment more gracefully. Once when he was making a speech in the Senate he repeatedly turned his eyes upon Senator Thurman was a little nettled, and asked: "When the Senator from New York turns and addresses his remarks to me, does he expect me to respond?" "When I speak of the law," responded Senator Conklin," I turn to the distinguished Senator from Ohio as the Mussulman turns toward Mecca. I look to him as I would look to the common law of England, the world's most copious volume of human jurisprudence."
