The Ohio Legislature has just passed a law requiring all executions to take place within the walls of the penitentiary at Columbus.

When Napoleon fell at Sedan the national debt of France was $[illegible] 000,000. The heavy expenses of the war, and the enormous indemnity she was compelled to pay to Germany, increased it to nearly $4 000,000,000, all of this increase occurring between 1871 and 1873. The debt has never been decreased since, in recent to what they call "extraordinary budgets" has created in addition a floating debt of $[illegible] 000, making a total national debt of over $6,000,000,000 which requires an annual payment of interest and expense charges of $[illegible] to carry it. This is more than five times the annual interest and expense charge of the United States on account of her debt, although her debt was the result of a greater war, lasting four times longer. Yet the light burden left for our people to bear was thought to be impossible to reach, and foreign financiers at the close of our war predicted that we would never pay the debt. Our success has been the work of the much derided and recklessly defamed Republican party. Will its successor reverse the experience of history by proving as honest and capable?

"Friend Jones, I have a notion to apply for the Postmastership at —— Snyder county, will you sign my petition?" "Certainly I will," said Jones, "but it will be of no use." "Why not?" "Because you are a Republican." "But I voted for Cleveland, you know, and I have a right to ask it?" "So you have, but there are plenty of men at —— who are Democrats from principle, and one of the number will get it." "Then you think Cleveland will not appoint me solely because I voted for him?" "Certainly not, you refused to vote for Blaine, and while the campaign was going on the Democrats said you, but now when the offices are to be given out, none but Democrats will be rewarded." "Well, I sometimes think I made a fool of myself, and I guess it would have been more to my credit to have voted the old ticket." "Of course it would—political traitors are always despised by the party in power." "Well, I will know better in future—you out."—Gov. Mifflinburg Telegraph.

Governor Curtin Pays the Damages

The following incident is related by the Bellefonte News: "When the commissioners of the District of Columbia took official cognizance of the charges against the Pennsylvania militia much indignation was expressed by the prominent Pennsylvanians in Washington at the undue amount of publicity given to the unfortunate affair.

"The 'Old War Governor,' immediately on hearing of it, went to the office of the district commissioners to put a stop to the mountainous proportions of the newspaper gossip about it. He asked the value of the stolen property. The amount was $89. The governor, true defender of the good name and interests of the Keystone state, tendered his check, then and there, for the above amount, which the commissioners declined to receive. 'Take it,' insisted the governor, 'and stop the d—m newspaper talk.' 'But,' rejoined the commissioners; 'it is no debt of yours. 'We have no right to receive your money for it.' 'Take it,' earnestly insisted the governor; 'Pennsylvania will pay me. She is

PRAYER IN GEN. GRANT'S CASE

Now that Gen. Grant is so greatly improved, and his entire recovery is not improbable, it is believed by great numbers of pious people that he has been snatched from death by the power of prayer.

Ever since his prostration, they say, prayers in his behalf have continually ascended to heaven throughout the Union. The petitions have gone up in churches, at prayer meetings, at domestic devotions, and at religious conventions, and many thousands of Christians have daily retired to their closets to plead for his life.

Therefore it is, say these unquestioning believers in the efficacy of prayer, that even after the physicians had confessed that medical science was unable to save him from speedy death, Gen. Grant's case suddenly took a favorable turn, and he was at once on the high road to recovery. When man gave him up, God stretched out His hand to save him in answer to the numberless prayers with which the faithful had stormed the gates of heaven.

That is, they will regard his recovery as a miracle worked in answer to prayer and to prove to all the world the efficacy of prayer. It is almost as if the dead had been raised to life, they will say, for Gen. Grant was cured of an incurable disease, an impossibility to man and according to human logic; and hence God alone could restore him as Lazarus was brought forth from the tomb. "It is God who has done it in answer to the earnest prayers of His people," says the Rev. Dr. Talmage; "it is power that has done it." And the Rev. Dr. Newman expresses the same opinion; while at a meeting of Baptist ministers on Monday Gen. Grant's restoration was referred to as miraculous.

On the assumption that his disease was incurable and his speedy death certain under the operation of human laws his recovery would, of course, be a miracle which could not be gainsaid. It may be true that Garfield died though a great part of the Christian world was on its knees pleading for his life, and that thousands of Christians pass away daily despite earnest prayers for their restoration to health; but the one case of Gen. Grant would be enough to prove that even in these days a miracle may be worked by prayer. Professor Tyndale's prayer test would be satisfied, and the whole world would be compelled to believe in the efficacy of the faith cure. Famous as Gen. Grant may have been before, he would become far more famous forever as a man who had been rescued from death by a veritable miracle scarcely less astonishing than the raising of Lazarus after he had been three days buried.

But suppose that all the praying was done on a mistaken assumption: that God was asked to save Gen. Grant from a danger which did not exist; that the physicians were wrong in their diagnosis of his disease; that his trouble was not cancer, but something which was curable and really never endangered his life, provided it was properly treated? The prayers which have ascended for him were occasioned by reports sent out from his sick chamber by his physicians, and they would not have gone up if the people had generally understood that he was suffering from a disease which did not imperil his life, but from which he might recover in the ordinary course of things.

It seems probable now that there was no real justification for alarm at any time, that the physicians merely advertised their own mistaken diagnosis, and that therefore the case of Gen. Grant proves nothing in regard to prayer either one way or the other. If he gets well, it will be because he was bound to recover from a curable disease as soon as the physicians recognized it for what it was.—N. Y. Sun.

Notwithstanding the very sore feeling left in loyal Americans by the mean conduct of the British Government toward the United States during the rebellion, we cannot help feeling some twings of compassion at the pitiful situation the old harridan finds herself in just now. Here she has been baited and substantially beaten in the Soudan driven to the wall and to the absolute necessity of risking a great war with Russia, and now France is threatening to send a fleet to Alexandria to take the offense of suppressing a French paper out of Egyptian hides, an act which the British Ministry acknowledges England is responsible for. Surely she is in deep water.

The Illinois Legislature is still balloting for United States Senator.

A RIP VAN WINKLE

A noticeable personage among those to be met along the avenues and in the hotel lobbies of Washington during the past few days has been an ex-soldier, the circumstances of whose career since the war have invested him with a peculiar interest. Early in 1862 he, then a young man, enlisted at his home in Southern Indiana, and was assigned to a regiment that was actively engaged during the whole war. This young soldier made himself useful, was always in the thickest of the fray, and was promoted to be an officer. In one of the last battles fought before the final surrender, while leading a charge, the young captain was struck in the head by a ball, and fell. His soldiers, with whom he was a great favorite, carried him to the rear, where he had every attention. Then he was conveyed to Washington and placed in one of the hospitals, and, after a long period of suffering, his wound healed, but his reason had fled. He was officially declared insane, and placed in an asylum near Washington, where he remained for twenty years in that condition. A few months ago his reason returned, and he is to-day as sane a man as lives. He can scarcely comprehend that he is not the same young man that he was twenty years ago. He has found some of his comrades here, and these have treated him with great kindness. He can describe scenes and incidents of the war with as much clearness as if they had taken place but a few months ago. Among the friends he has recently made is Ex-Secretary of War Lincoln, who became interested in his case, and has had his application for a pension made special by the Commissioner of Pensions, who also took an interest in the matter, and within a few days he will receive $10,000 back pension money, with which he intends going into business.
