CLARK ON HARMONY.

FELLOW DEMOCRATS OF TEXAS: The conditions existing in the Democratic party of our state today call for the highest patriotism upon the part of every Democrat in Texas. This is no time, fellow Democrats, to tear open anew old sores; this is no time to dwell upon past differences or to discuss who was right or who was wrong. The Democratic party is imperiled, and it is the duty of every Democrat, no matter what his special individual opinions may be as to public policies, to lay his personal opinions upon the altar of his party and bow his head to the will of the majority. I am not here tonight inspired with bitterness, but in a spirit of the most catholic patriotism, with a heart, I trust fellow Democrats, broad enough and large enough to take in the excellency of every Democrat in Texas no matter how he stood two years ago. What is the condition of the party today? Say what we will, it is rent in twain with possibly or approximately equal numbers on either side. Grave issues are before us, to be determined at the ballot box during the coming year, issues involving the prosperity and happiness not only of the people of Texas, but of the entire people of the United States. Shall the personality of men keep us apart? Shall the spoils of office intervene to continue the division among Democrats, or rather shall we yet, coming together upon essential and fundamental principles without humiliation to any man or any Democrat have a glorious and reunited Democracy in Texas? I think I speak the sentiment of every Democrat who stood with me in the past when I say that nothing can be dearer to our hearts, and that we come here tonight with candor, with sincerity, with integrity of purpose and make our proposition to the Democracy of Texas. This proposition may not be perfect; it would be wonderful, indeed, if it were, but it is at least a beginning in the grand work, and certainly it addresses itself to the calm, patriotic consideration of every true Democrat. Fellow citizens, there are essentials and nonessentials in the principles of a party. There are certain things upon which the vitality of the party depends, and without which the party could not exist, or if it had an existence it would be but sounding brass and tinkling cymbal, and there are other principles which sometimes upon the hustings are called essentials, but which really are matters of administrative duty. I shall not go to any length into these principles tonight because I am addressing Democrats who are as well posted upon the subject as I am myself, and I refer to them simply in stating that only the essentials of Democratic unity are presented, while the nonessentials are discarded. Can any reason be urged why Democrats cannot agree and why they must not agree upon essentials in principle? Is it asking too much of a Democrat to say, "Come, we will take our stand upon the national Democratic platform." If he declines to come with me when I ask him to stand with me upon that platform, I know he is not a Democrat. Is it asking too much of the Democrats of Texas who are in part responsible for the present national Democratic administration to come and meet us no matter what their views are and unite in the indorsement of our own president and our congressmen? I do not regard the Democratic administration as embodied in the personality of Mr. Cleveland and his cabinet. The national Democratic administration consists of a glorious Democratic president and a glorious majority of Democratic senators and congressmen, and to their united wisdom we have committed the destiny of our party. We, in common with the Democrats of the United States, have delegated to them the duty of taking charge of the interests of the party and the government, to be administered according to Democratic principles, and are we prepared now when the work is just fairly begun to refuse to say to them, we indorse you and we swear to stand by and sustain you? Can any reasonable objection be urged? I know it is said sometimes that Democrats are not man worshipers. That is true, and with the personality of Mr. Cleveland we have no concern, though possibly there is not a man within the sound of my voice but agrees with everything that Mr. Cleveland has done. So do I; but that is not the question. The question is, shall the Democratic party present a united front in sustaining a Democratic administration that they themselves have put upon the country? And does it smack of discord and war among Democrats if we make a proposition to our brother Democrats on the other side to meet us and let us shake hands upon this platform in our indorsement of the national Democratic platform and administration? That fellow Democrats, is the gist and the substance of the proposition to our brethren on the other side. Are there differences among us? Yes. National differences? Yes. Can we not settle them? Yes. How? By relegating them to this Democratic congress and Democratic president and agreeing to abide by their action. Where else will you find a tribunal with jurisdiction and authority to decide these controversies but in congress and in the president? Are there local differences among us as to questions of state policy? Yes. Are they irreconcilable? No. Differences? Yes, differences at times, but when sifted, analyzed and held up in the light of the sun these differences disappear in the glorious light of honest truth. Did you ever differ as to the propriety and duty of the state to exercise its power and jurisdiction in these matters? No. Never has a Democrat denied to his state the authority and jurisdiction to regulate its own people. We have differed on details in the application of principles which were conceded, but certainly those differences can be made to disappear. How? By a patriotic resolution and determination on the part of every Democrat to relegate them to a Democratic state convention composed of Democrats exclusively. If there be any objection to that it is beyond my ken to discover it. What else? Now let us be candid with each other, inspired purely with a spirit of patriotism. What has produced this division in the Democratic party of Texas? It can be answered in a single word—Populism. Populism invaded the household and sowed dissension. This is the condition that stares us in the face. What is essential to Democratic unity? That we purge the party of Populism. That is all we ask. We ask the condemnation of Populism and of Republicanism. Is that an arrogant demand from one Democrat to another? When the time comes that a Democrat cannot condemn Republicanism and Populism as inimical to Democracy and destruction of free government the time for Democracy to die has come. What else? A proposition that we take the Democratic vote for the Democratic president in 1892 as the basis of our reunion. Where else can we go for all Democrats for the Democratic vote? I am laying no blame on anybody. Where else, I repeat, can we go for a Democratic vote upon which to base a representation. It strikes me I have heard or read somewhere—I cannot exactly recollect the place or time—a suggestion that we take the Democratic vote for governor in 1890 as a basis. Why, these were the dies irae, the beginning of the vital conflict, a time when Bill Farmer and Stump Ashby and Harry Tracy were Democrats. No; we cannot go back to 1890; we ought not to be required to do so, but we will go to the vote of 1892, when every Democrat in the sound of my voice can make affidavit that every man in Texas who voted for Grover Cleveland was a Simon pure Democrat. There can be no mistake made in that because it is based upon the solid, regular Democracy. But what difference really does it make in this matter of detail except to secure the purity of representation.

Certainly it occurs to us that Democrats can agree upon this proposition that we make. Here is the whole law and the gospel. Point out to me, if you please, one single paragraph, word or syllable in the proposition that casts humiliation upon any Democrat. We commend it to the Democrats of Texas with our prayers, and may God give them the right spirit to see and appreciate the spirit in which the offer is made. To recur for a moment to the question of the national Democratic party which I feel ought not to to be passed over without some comment upon existing views. We hear it openly said and, perhaps, too frequently that the south and west ought to get together and ignore the national Democratic party. Turn our backs upon the national Democratic party. Gray-headed men who sit within the sound of my voice cannot be hoodwinked by any appeal like that. [Judge Clark here at length detailed to his listeners their experience amid the stormy days of reconstruction and the restoration of their liberties by the national Democratic party.] What? Do you propose to go back on that party and join a prairie dog party? No, fellow citizens, when I forget the national Democratic party and my brother Democrats of the north "may my right hand forget its cunning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." Differences upon economic questions may exist between us. I look over them and see beyond them to see that our hearts are true to the principles of Democracy, and I will stand by these principles to the end.

That is all I have to say; perhaps it is all I ought to say. We come honestly and sincerely with the olive branch of peace, believing that the time has come when Democrats should not be kept apart. We come with a way and a method by which we can get together and by which officeholders and office-seekers must stand aside and let us get together. Offices sink into insignificance when compared with the salvation of the Democratic party and of the state of Texas. Who cares who fills the offices so long as they are honest men and good Democrats? What bodes it to you or to me who may fill this office or that office, from the highest to the lowest? Away with the thought of office when patriots get together for the purpose of reunion! Away with all idea of personal aggrandizement! Let us abolish every selfish sentiment, remembering only that this great state is imperiled and that the Democratic party must be saved! If we are inspired with these sentiments, and honestly and sincerely determine to come together, all the powers of hell and all the officeholders cannot keep us apart. I invoke that spirit here tonight and over the whole of this broad state of Texas. I invoke the spirit of every patriotic Democrat to permit no obstacle to intervene for the perpetuity of the glorious party of which we are all proud to be honorable and worthy members. Let us go forward, fellow Democrats, in the grand work before us, and let us not falter or become discouraged. Let us talk the matter over as friends and brethren. Let up stand by a plan which will preserve, protect and defend the purity of Democratic principles and the Democratic party for all time to come. I cannot contemplate defeat in this cause; I cannot bring myself to consider that Democrats will refuse to get together; but if bad counsel prevails and evil passions obscure and there is a refusal to meet half way you Democrats who stood by me in 1892—which God forbid—then nothing remains for us but to raise the flag of pure Democracy and stand by the national Democratic party on its platform, swearing by our Democratic president that we elected. If that evil day comes—which God forbid!—we can say as Abraham said to Lot, "let there be no strife between thee and me. We will take the high hills of the Democratic party beyond Jordan and you can tarry while you will in the valley of Sodom."
