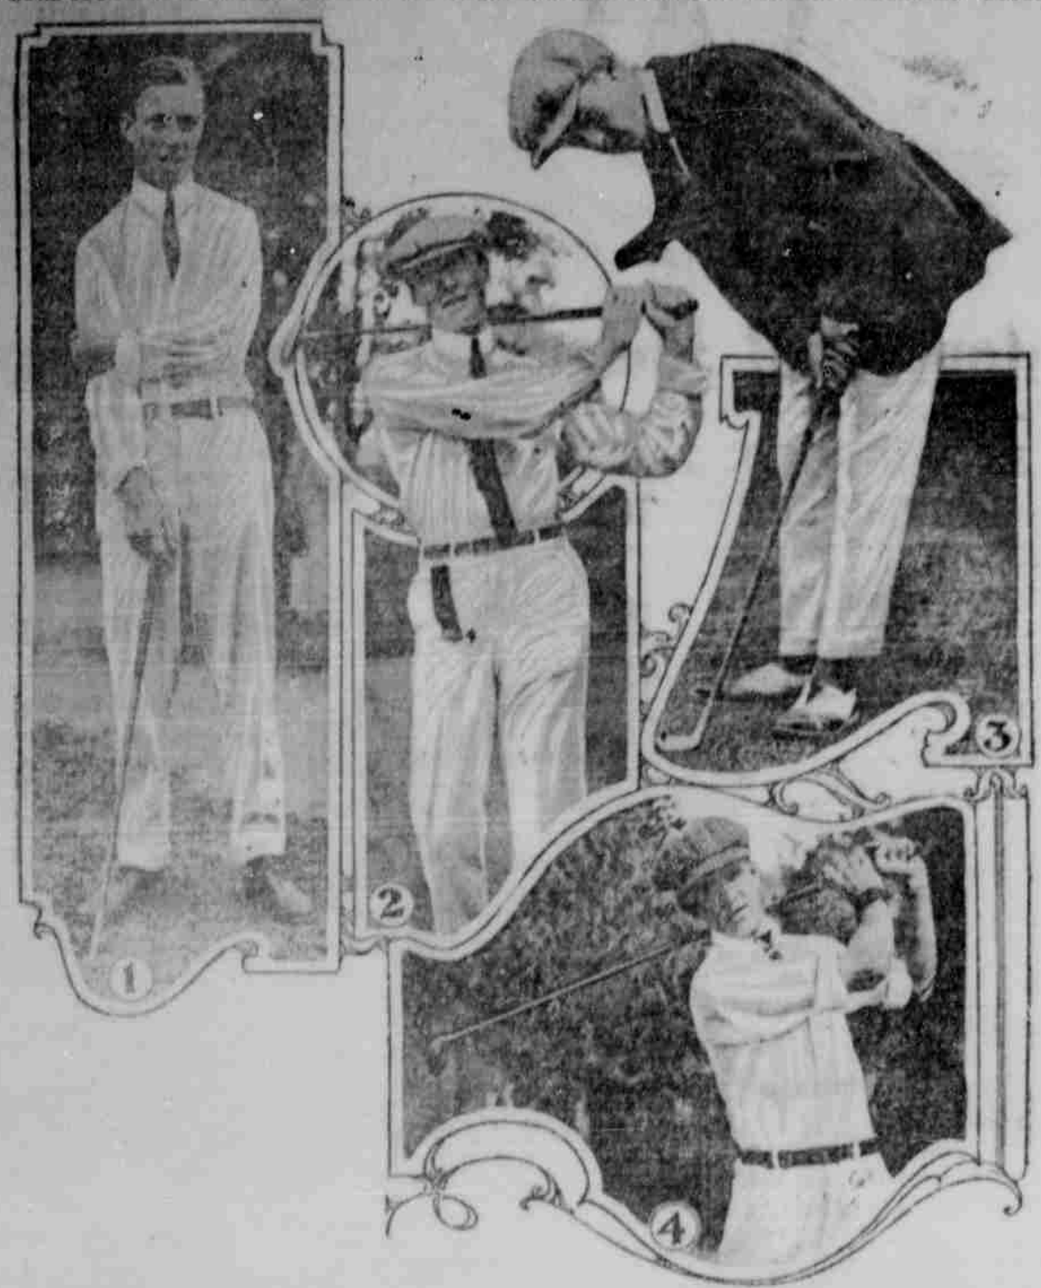
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIVE GOLF STARS OUT FOR CHAMPIONSHIP TITLE



PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 16.—Pick and pretty champions will take part in the twenty-second national amateur golf championship that will open on the Merion Cricket club links, near Philadelphia, next Monday. Howard F. Whitney, secretary of the Golf Writers Golf association, has issued the entry list. It contains the names of 155 golf stars. Chief among them, because it includes D. Travers of Upper Montclair, four times winner of the amateur and once of the open championship. He is reported to be in bad health. Of course, Francis Ouimet is on the list, and almost is Walter J. Travis, "the grand old man" of the game. With this trio out of the way "Chick" Evans, national open title holder, seems to be the one best bet, as Robert A. Gardner, the champion, is said to be suffering from infection in a hand. Evans is paired to play with F. Mortimer Barnes, secretary of the Metropolitan association. Word to-night has been received from Detroit, the home of last year's champion, Ned Sawyer of Wheaton is paired with Davidson Herron of Oakmont. Gardner is paired with Hamilton Kerr of Riverside. From the metropolitan district there is a galaxy of stars including Philip Carter of Nassau, Nelson Whitney, winner of the national team championship, Percy W. Peer of Montclair, Reginald Lewis of Wykagyl holder of the Westchester and Connecticut championships, Fred Herreshoff of the national links, Cornelius Kirby, holder of the metropolitan and New Jersey amateur titles, Jess Marston of Ballybunion, Howard F. Whitney, association secretary, who is paired with Howard Perkins, vice president, Archie M. Reid of St. Andrews, C. P. Van Vleck, Jr., of Baltusrol and Louis Livingston of Lido, playing with Henry J. Topping of Greenwich, winner of the Ardsley and Garden City championships. The only players from outside the United States are W. S. Greenhill and Dwight R. Lyon of Hamilton, Canada. The last named was runner up to Allan R. Ross in the national championship at Englewood in 1916. Couples will be sent off at five minute intervals. Layout shows four of leading men in country: No. 1 shows "Chick" Evans, 2, Gerald Kirkup; 3, Philip Carter; 4, Jess Marston.

WORLD-FAMED SEVRES FACTORIES BUSY NOW MAKING WAR MACHINES

ARTISTS WHO FORMERLY DECORATED DELICATELY-TINTED CHINA ENGAGE IN GRIM WORK.

PLANTS ARE ENLARGED

PARIS, Sept. 16.—The world-famed national porcelain factory at Sevres has suddenly been transformed into part of the huge war machine. Instead of making those dainty and fragile statuettes and vases which are the wonder of art collectors, it is turning out "potteries de guerre," in earthenware retorts and cauldrons for manufacturing saccharine and for all the various chemical processes of producing high explosives. Even the famous artists whose names are associated with the delicate coloring of Sevres porcelain, are now exercising their art in examining these ugly pots so as to make them more esthetic and to the needs and chemists used in the war processes.

Early in the war, M. Bourgeois, Administrator of Sevres, learned that the production of high explosives for artillery was falling short owing to the lack of earthen receptacles capable of bearing acids. He therefore proposed to the Minister of Fine Arts, M. Dalbiez, that the art work of Sevres be suspended and its energies given to producing the receptacles needed for powder-making. The idea was approved and acted. The transformation was begun. There were many difficulties to overcome. Half of the force had gone off to the war. Those who remained were either exempted by the most delicate class of work. The furnaces, too, were designed for small art objects, and there was only one furnace big enough to make powder cauldrons.

But the obstacles were overcome, the whole establishment being inspired with the idea that it was contributing to the national defense. The sculptor of bronze figures did not hesitate to make the plaster models for the big retorts. The chemists studied the methods of adapting the various hard clays to the new kind of war work. The artists did their part in enamelling. The working force was cut four foreigners, mostly employed on vases and bronzes, enlarged so as to take on the powder conditions. Even the work was going at such a rate that a branch railway was run into the factory, connecting it with the great powder factories at Angoulême, St. Chamond, St. Etienne, Toulouse, Bordeaux, Dijon and Brest.

This Sevres has come through a complete transformation, and is today furnishing thousands of receptacles of all sorts in which powder, explosives and gases of all sorts are manufactured and stored. With a staff less than half its usual strength, the production of Sevres is five times as great today as it was before the war. And besides the great quantity of its war output, the quality of its work is making it a mecca of expert school for the engineers of the various powder factories. The chief engineers of these factories now come to Sevres to study the chemical methods employed in hardening clays and making them more resistant to high temperatures. A huge new furnace, three times the size of any heretofore used, is now being built for the manufacture of retorts of specially large dimensions. And the change from an art basis to an industrial basis has also necessitated the building of vast new kilns, or workrooms, with drying rooms, etc.

"We hope to see art resume its place before long at Sevres," said M. Bourgeois, the director, "and when it does it will find industry has given every resources to art. And it will be a lasting souvenir that a national institution founded for the development of ceramique art was able to join with French industry when the war called for united efforts of national defense."

GOOD FOR A FEW DAYS ONLY

500 OFFER NEARS A CLOSE

BEGINNING October 1, The Caller will publish a Monday Morning Edition. This edition will replace the Weekly Caller, now issued on Fridays. In addition to the usual week's summary, it will contain the latest telegraph news of the day. In effect, it will make The Caller a seven-day paper; but the Monday Morning Edition will be forwarded through the postoffice exclusively.

On the same date, because of the increase in cost of all raw materials, the subscription price of the Daily Caller—six times a week—will be raised to $6 a year, and this new price will be adhered to without favor. The cost of the Monday Morning Edition and the Daily, to regular subscribers, after October 1, will be $7. The cost of the Monday Morning Edition alone, as a Weekly, will be $1.50 a year, as it is at present.

To the first 500 subscribers who send in a check for the present price of the Daily, $5, we will send both the Daily and the new Monday Morning Edition for one year. It makes no difference how you stand on our books, this offer holds. That is, if you are paid in advance, say to January 1, 1917, your year's subscription will be credited from that date; but the Monday Morning Edition will only be sent for one year. If you are slightly in arrears, your subscription will be extended from that date it expired.

This offer will not be duplicated. It nears a close. Many have taken advantage of it. Mail your check today; tomorrow may be too late!
