MANY NEW MEMBERS OF FACULTY

W. C. A. and took a prominent part in all student activities. Since 1912 she has been teaching in the Kirksey school, a private institution in Indiana. She has also been a member of the Southwestern Field committee of the Y. W. C. A. for several years, and is now in New York City taking work in the National Training School for the Y. W. C. A.

Miss Carrie Grimsrud, assistant in the voice department, is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music. She has taken special work under some of the leading musicians of the country since being graduated from the Boston school in 1910. Most of her teaching has been with private pupils.

Miss Powers, of Saugus, receives a diploma in the commercial department in May, besides doing the college college work. She will assist Mrs. Edna E. Hudson in the commercial department.

Miss Geneva May of Chickasha received a diploma from the Women's College this spring in the physical education department, under Miss Irene Finney, whom she will assist during the coming year.

Miss Lena Russell of Snyder did second work in the expression department under Miss Frances Davis during the past year. She will assist in the expression work during the coming year.

The additions made at increase in the College faculty of more than twenty-five per cent, declared to be one of the greatest annual increases in the faculty of a state school in this country.

"The large faculty indicates, in general," a member of the state board of education said in commenting upon the additions made to the list. "But the quality of the talent obtained is still more to be commended upon. It places the teaching force of the Oklahoma College for Women on a par with that of any college or university in the southwest."

A Question of Dignity.

Towards the close of the trial regarding a band of about two hundred rebels decided to surrender, but considered it beneath their dignity to give themselves up to the two policemen who, at that moment, were the only representatives of law and order near. Their leader accordingly telephoned to the nearest barracks and asked that a more imposing force should be sent to take the rebels in charge. Being only too willing to oblige, the officer sent a considerable detachment, and the insurgents were thus able to march to their place of detention with unruffled dignity between the ranks of their armed guards.

ANNE'S FELLOW-BOARDER

By CATHERINE CRANNER.

Anne sat before her dressing table and surveyed the satisfactory result of her hour's work at toilette. The few concessions before will be results of dinner time were emphasized, the corresponding time in her remarks little and curvature lost, and made her dark eyes look darker still. But as she looked the color paled as her troubled thought, her pretty mouth quivered into wistfulness and her eyes looked pitifully into their reproachful in the little oval mirror.

"What's the use of it all, Anne Blanchard?" she asked her reflection. "Here you are, four and twenty, with a passable enough complexion, a pretty hat and a decent suit, but who really cares whether you are fine or whether you are four times twenty, with a wrinkled skin and a bonnet and shawl?"

Indulging in thoughts like these had brought Anne to a mile or less pessimistic viewpoint of life in general. The next morning, as she went to her desk in the offices of a big corporation, she felt little interest or ambition in her work. She had hardly time to put her purse in its accustomed place in her desk and to open the typewriter shell before an office boy came breathless up.

"The big boss wants you in the store-room," said the boy, "and he says to bring your notebook. There's some big deal around here, too, as far I can't tell the drift."

Anne hastened away to comply with the unusual demand. She found her employer engaged in a conference with the manager of the stock department, and she was instructed to make notes of the questions asked and the suggestions made by each man.

Later they went to other department managers, and by luncheon time they had made the rounds of the various departments, and Anne's notebook held enough work to keep her heavily busy all the afternoon. To complete the task, she remained a quarter of an hour later than usual, and as she left the building some thoughtless boys who were also late in leaving gave the revolving door a big push just as she entered it, and she suddenly received upset and thrown almost fairly out against a man who had preceded the boys and without lighting a cigarette while a bowling stuck an evening paper into his hand. As the man recognized Anne, he tossed the cigarette aside, raised his hat and asked whether the thoughtless boys had caused her any injury.

"Not at all, thank you, Mr. Mills," responded Anne, as she recognized the manager of the credit department, whom she had met for the first time that morning. A few moments later on the street car she found herself standing crowded close to Mr. Mills.

"Mr. Gramby's little quiz this morning was a part of his 'get-acquainted' scheme, I suppose," began Mr. Mills, for seeing Anne's puzzled look, he added: "At a meeting of all the department managers the other day Mr. Gramby told us that the lack of general fellow-feeling among the workers and the employers was becoming a serious defect in this company's management, and he purposed to try to bring about a better understanding all around. I supposed you were 'in' on the little plan."

"Oh, no," Anne stammered as she spoke. "stenographers, especially when they happen to be girls, are supposed to be just automatons, without desire or capacity for initiative thinking or acting any more than any other office fixture. So, after awhile, one feels as other stuff in any sort of human relationship."

"Oh, come now," laughed Mr. Mills, "you're in the very frame of mind that I was before Mr. Gramby gave us that cutting good talk the other day, but I got to thinking that perhaps my own mental attitude had more to do with my difficulties than anything else, and so I sat down for one whole evening and looked myself in the face, as it were, and sized myself up, with the result that I've determined to get right with myself and others just as soon as possible."

Mr. Mills ushered Anne into a seat that had become vacated, and seated himself beside her, continuing his part of the conversation. "I've decided that indifference breeds indifference, and I'm going to start out and try to find all that's praiseworthy and interesting in the plain, everyday men and women I meet. As a step in that direction, I've given up expensive apartments in a bachelor establishment, and am going back to one modest room in a first-rate boarding house managed by a capable, motherly woman."

"Well," said Anne, with a long sigh, "you've given me just the thought I needed to turn my mind from the pessimism I was falling into."

Mr. Mills reached for the bell just as Anne finished speaking, and somehow both of them felt embarrassed when it developed that they left the car at the same place.

"We must be neighbors," said Mr. Mills, as he escorted Anne from the car step to the curb. "I've taken a room at Mrs. Elmore's. Do you happen to know her house?"

"I've lived there for two years," said Anne.

And that is how one man and his wife began their acquaintance.

HER HOME NO LONGER CHILDLESS

Operation not Necessary after Taking the Great Medicine for Women

Miller's Falls, Mass. — "Doctors said I had displacement very badly and I would have to have an operation. I had a pessimist in both sides and a falling sensation in my right side. I could not do much work. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My health was poor. We had been married four years and had no children.

After using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Dose Further I became well and strong and was saved from the operation. We are now the parents of a big baby girl and I praise your remedies to others and give you permission to publish my letter." — Mrs. Frances Gillmartin, Jr., Bridge Street, Miller's Falls, Mass.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is famous for restoring women to normal health and strength. When this is done women no longer despair of having children.

A woman should be reluctant to submit to a surgical operation until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial. If you have a case that needs special advice, write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

ROBBED OF GLORY OF TRIUMPH

The death sentence was imposed because Fryatt, although not a naval officer, tried to ram the German submarine U-33 on March 28, 1915. For this act Captain Fryatt was praised by the British admiralty for "heroic conduct." He was later captured by the Germans.
