

Saint Wary's Beacon,
LEONARDTOWN, MD.

THURSDAY MORNING, Dec. 21st, 1883.

THE SPEAKERSHIP CONTEST.—The speakership contest has ended by the election of John G. Carlisle, of Ky., over Randall, of Pa., and Cox of N. Y. Mr. Carlisle received double the vote that was cast for Randall, and would, no doubt, have received in addition the entire vote that Cox obtained if the contest had been narrowed down between him and his chief opponent. The triumph of the low tariff sentiment in the late conflict for speaker is therefore marked and emphatic and is conclusive as to the future attitude of the democratic party, both in the coming legislation of Congress and in the selection of a democratic candidate for the next presidency. The mere negative battle-cry of the New York Sun is enlarged at last by an affirmative proposition, and this proposition is, "after the tariffs are turned out," to turn in a lower and a fairer tariff.

THE 48TH CONGRESS.—The first session of the 48th Congress convened at the Federal Capitol at noon Monday last. In the Senate, Mr. Edmunds, president pro tempore, presided, and a number of new senators were sworn in. Soon after organization, the Senate adjourned for the day. In the House, Hon. John G. Carlisle was elected Speaker by a vote of 191, to 112 for Hon. J. W. Keifer, of Ohio, and 5 scattering. Mr. Carlisle was conducted to the Chair by Messrs. Randall and Keifer and addressed the members in a speech which was listened to with profound attention. His conservative yet pronounced expressions justified the choice of the democratic party, dispelled the misrepresentations which had been made in regard to his position and will command the confidence and respect of the country. Even extreme protectionists appear to have been pleased with it, but there is no mistaking its meaning. The doctrine of the democratic party, or the majority voice of it on the subject of the tariff will be enforced by the new speaker, so far as it may lie in his power to do it, with no uncertain sound. Mr. Carlisle is evidently a man who has the full courage of his convictions.

Messrs. Editors:—The very sensible reflections of a writer in your last paper, whose chosen sobriquet is "Senex," have aroused from me a feeling that had overcome me, and frustrated the execution of a design some what akin to his, and prevented my humble ideas from being thrown out to the readers of your journal, touching the late election in this country and matters germane thereto. I like your valued correspondent "Senex," too have to lament the sad degeneracy that characterizes our representatives of to-day, as compared with those who held the public interests in trust forty years or more ago. Time was, in the recollection of many now living, when the average representative of St. Mary in the halls of General Assembly outranked, intellectually and morally, that which guards our State's interests in the Capitol at Washington during the present era. Men aspire to high places now-a-days, which call for education, sound judgment and character, who would not have had the requisite audacity to do so three or four decades ago. And why is this? It cannot be fairly charged to party and a blind adherence thereto, for when party spirit more widely rampant than during the twenty years, running down from 1840 to '60, except perhaps during the two last campaigns of the old mud abused hero of New Orleans? And during what epoch of our history as a country did we have a purer men to act as custodians of our interests in the State House at Annapolis? I think it can with more justice be ascribed to the degeneracy of the times and the leveling spirit that sprang up from the late civil war. Plenty of instances there were, during that unholy struggle, when men without education or any culture jumped into prominence as fighters and wielded bloody swords with dexterity, in whose hands, that "mighty instrument of little men," would have indeed cut a very sorry figure. Other cases there were, in which men of high culture and finished military education, were found to be dead failures as leaders and fighters, and thus learning fell to a discount and ignominy ran up to a high premium. This feeling and the inevitable demoralization of a civil war threw incompetent men on the surface, and being in a majority, they have continued to hold the reins of government, and to keep under foot men of vastly more fitness and sterling merit than themselves. There is no use to clamor and call attention to this subversion of the proper order of things, for the popular sentiment favors largely the present status of affairs, and time alone can bring into active play the adequate remedy to meet the case. All know that when the air becomes foul and murky there is nothing to be done about it, but wait and bear, until such time as a storm comes and ruffles the elements in which we must move and breathe. Unless, as very many suppose will be the case, our system of democratic government proves to be a dead failure, a change must come, and the able clouds that hang about the horizon, in a short time will be blown away, and a new order dawn upon our State and country, more propitious for the stability and prosperity of both. Senex, my brother croaker, let us wait "till the clouds roll by," as the popular ally of the day has it. Our sands of life being well exhausted, we may not live to see such pure and able men as S. Fenwick, Wm. M., and B. T. Merrick again arise from the obscurity of private station to save the people, but it must appear to us a and comensary on the practical working of popular government! Alas! that such men, ornaments of the bar, the world of literature and men of a, who could fill the chair of State with honor and dignity, or grace a Senate and wheel justice on our country, as trusted and faithful ambassadors to any court in Europe, should be allowed to rest out, and die in comparative obscurity, and all because the good sense is not in the people who wield the destiny of the State, to see and appreciate the rare good qualities they individually and collectively possess. And have we not in our midst able and honest and experienced men, who, in common parlance, are shied for the same reason? But I will not pursue this unpleasant subject any further, and will only take a cursory view of local matters, and inspect the battle-field now that the smoke of the conflict has passed away, and the din of the fight is hushed into passive slumber. After the republican convention in September had assembled and the miserable ticket it made out was promulgated to the world, moderate and thinking members of that fraternity stood aghast, and each, without exception, was ready to admit in private conversation that he was ashamed of the ticket as a whole, and begged to wash his hands of all responsibility in its promulgation. The conservative men of the county saw their opportunity, and most were convinced that they could win, by putting into the field a first-class ticket, which would contrast strongly with the one already before the public. They began to heat about for candidates, and various names were suggested. One gentleman was objected to and ruled out as an ineligible candidate for legislative honors because he was too poor to put up money in the campaign, while his fitness was never brought in question. Another one was named who was admitted on all sides to be qualified in every particular to represent the county, except that he was known to have a habit of acting and thinking for himself, and a certain prominent factor in ticket making could not count on him with certainty to do his bidding if elected, while this same influential gentleman's heated and bitter antagonism for future years, toward the man who might lead him to the top of the mountain, he proposed to put down and keep down. From these two camps (and there were plenty of others) there are two fair and legitimate deductions to be drawn: from the first, that a very poor man, no matter how pure and able, need look for countenance from the leaders in this county, of that party whose very name comes from the Greek word, demas, meaning people, and from the second, that no man, who is not an avowed and decided friend or enemy of a leading office-holder under the State government, can expect to be invited to become a candidate for either branch of the General Assembly of the State. This means, when simmered down to plain verbiage, that there has been inaugurated here the same system that has prevailed in Baltimore for years past, which ignores almost entirely manly, independent and thinking men, and substitutes for them prepledged and pliant tools of boss or governing politicians. In the make up of the late conservative ticket, while there was individual merit and fitness in it, the finger-marks of self-interest were easily discerned, and the advancement of party interest was subordinated to personal aims and objects in a most shocking manner. If the good for place and power among the republicans threatens, to engulf us in universal ruin by the elevation of weak or bad men to power, as is so often charged, those who have an interest in conserving what is of value, should effect this remedy, by putting up for office, none but able, pure and firm men. This pandering to the "old poll" sentiment, or French Canoodle, or "old time" feeling, which bending obedience to possible brazen wealth, may be politic, looking to temporary success, but what is to be gained by such success, except an elephant in the shape of a man, and a very inconspicuous precedent for the generations yet to come along? Ye gentlemen who are so kind as to fix up tickets for us, who sit in the corner and croak of degenerate times, if you expect us to turn out and help to elect the ticket you manipulate, bear in mind, "and don't you forget it," that you must elevate your standard, for we had rather suffer defeat with Brutus, and die with him, than to live and triumph with men of meaner merit. Don't put quite so much soda and leaven of self-interest in the bread you give us to eat, and we may be stronger and better able to fight for the advancement of the interests of our county and State. Let I might render myself amenable to the charge, generally laid against old men, that of being prolix and garrulous. I will bring this letter to a close with a single remark or two. In candid republicans circles, it is freely admitted, that if the conservatives had put into the field one candidate who was well and favorably known to the public for the House of Delegates, he could have been elected without difficulty, and they will point to the success of the new Sheriff, who is an exceptional man, as corroborative of the fact. By all means, Messrs. Editors, keep brother Senex up to the writing point, as his views, well ventilated, may have a salutary effect upon the community at large, as they have most certainly on

IN MEMORIAM.
Died, of Consumption, on the 2nd of November, ult., in strict communion with the Roman Catholic Church and at peace with all mankind, CLARA EDMONDA CRANE, daughter of M. P. CRANE and the late John A. Crane, in the 18th year of her age.
The deceased was sweet and amiable in disposition—a self-sacrificing spirit—kind and charitable to all. Weep not, kind relatives and friends, for although the one you loved so well has passed over the river, yet a whole life consecrated to duty—to duty well performed—in a career of sacrifice beyond the grave—which will grow brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

MARRIED.
On 26th ult., by Rev. Father Neale, EDWARD O. GREEN to MARY E. EVANS.

Is your Life Worth a Dollar?
Perhaps that seems a high price for it, considering how poor your blood is, and how your whole system is prostrated, debilitated, and enfeebled. People have been heard to say, under such circumstances, that they would not give the toss of a copper for the chance between life and death. But when it comes to actually drawing near the grave, a man naturally draws back, and says he does not want to die. Life is very precious, and even to a broken-down man it is worth saving.

One dollar will buy a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters. That one dollar may start you on the road from misery to recovery. A man must take a very mean view of himself who is not willing to invest that much in making one serious effort to rescue himself from deadly debility, and to step into the enjoyment of solid health. Brown's Iron Bitters vitalizes the blood, tones the nerves, and rebuilds the system. Its work is well known—that dollar in a
