PURSE SNATCHER MAKES A HAUL

Mrs. J. E. Longstaff, a lodger at the Florence house, on Madison street, reported the loss of two purses to the police last night. They were tied up in a veil, which was afterwards found by the owner herself, together with a piece of one of the purses. One of the purses cointained a check for $1,000 and $16.50 in cash. The other had but a few dollars and a couple of rings in it.

The purses were lost between Fourth avenue and Fifth avenue on Madison street. The indications are that the purses were taken by a pickpocket. Purse snatchers are known to be at work in the business district of the city.

ASTONISHED CITY DADS

SOLONS STOOD AGHAST WHEN COUNCILMAN COLE VENTURED TO ASK WHY STREET CONTRACTORS WERE GRANTED EXTENSIONS

Councilman Cole dumfounded the other members of the council last night by putting a question never before asked in the history of the body. He wanted to know why the streets committee had recommended granting an extension of time on a city contract. Chairman Mullen, of the committee, arose to answer the question, but was so dazed by its unusual character that he could not even put up the usual "con" talk.

Cole wanted to know why the committee was willing to give Timothy Ryan an extension of time on his contract for constructing concrete walks on Minor avenue. Cole called attention to the fact that the committee was granting such extensions by the dozen without giving reasons, and as he considered the speedy completion of street contracts desirable he wanted to know why it was always done.

"In the first place the board of works recommends the extension," said Mullen. "We can't help ourselves, anyhow. The contracts are let so late in the fall that the contractors do not have sufficient dry weather to complete their work in time."

Last night's council meeting was unusual in the large number of questions asked about ordinances that were being steered through the official channels. Crichton asked for information upon almost every important measure recommended by the committees. He said he wanted to know about them before he voted.

Crichton was left off most of the important committees in the frame-up which elected Gill, of the Third ward, president of the council.

Mullen's plan for regrading Third avenue was presented to the council, which voted to open Westlake boulevard as soon as possible.

John Corgiat's petition that Main street be regraded and that the unused tracks of the Seattle Electric Company now in the streets be removed so as not to harass wagon traffic was placed on file.

The council accepted an invitation to attend an entertainment that is to be given at the Grand opera house next Sunday afternoon for the benefit of the Wayside hospital.

To construct a boat house for the harbor master's launch $300 was appropriated.

COUNCIL PASSED NEW LICENSE ORDINANCES

PEDDLERS' UNION WON OUT AFTER A FIGHT WITH RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION—FAKE AUCTIONS OF JEWELRY MUST PAY $30 A DAY IN LICENSE FEES

The Peddlers' union and the Seattle Retail Grocers' Association were arrayed against each other yesterday afternoon at the meeting of the license and revenue committee over an ordinance licensing peddlers' wagons. The peddlers and their attorneys won the day, but only after several of the peddlers themselves had referred pointedly to the Boston tea party and the battles of Lexington and Bunker hill as results of similar alleged attempts to unjustly tax the unrepresented.

The grocers' association wanted the license placed at $60 a year for two-horse wagons, $40 for one-horse wagons and $20 for hand carts. The peddlers claimed the tax was outrageous and it was finally fixed at $35 for two-horse wagons, $25 for one-horse wagons and $15 for hand carts. The grocers claimed that a higher tax was justified because of the large taxes paid by grocery firms.

The peddlers alleged that the association had for three years, through ex-Councilman Kistler, himself a grocer, persecuted citizens engaged in a legitimate business by imposing high licenses and restricting the peddling districts, their only protection having been the courts.

The new ordinance does not impose a license upon gardeners and florists selling the vegetables or flowers they grow themselves. It prohibits hawking. The ordinance was approved by the council last night.

Another ordinance making the license of jewelry auctioneers $30 per day for a period no shorter than three months was also passed. It was presented by local
